Eagles, Ospreys, Crows. Mr. Morgan's Corsair Sails. Mr. Felitto's Taxi Speaks. Mr. Bryant Would Jump.

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

IN ALBERTA'S huge Jasper Park, Fred Brewster, a Rocky Mountain guide, watches eagles, and ospreys, also called "fish hawks," sitting on the high limbs of a tree, eagles at the top, ospreys below, and still lower down plain crows, all watching the lake.

An osprey drops, brings up a fish. Two eagles pursue; the frightened osprey drops the fish. The eagles try to catch it, usually fail. The crows, flying close to the surface in a body never fail, always get the falling fish and enjoy it.

THERE YOU have our civilization upside down. With us, those nearest the ground get the least, those next above get a little more, and those at the very top get practically everything.

Perhaps we can change that situation in the "new era" as the birds have changed it in far away Alberta, and enable those near the ground to get the big share, the semi-little men a trifle higher up the next biggest share, while the eagle men on the top branch almost starve to death. Genuinely earnest "cracking down" might accomplish that.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN, of Broad and Wall streets, ordered his big yacht, Corsair, to his front door on East Island, and will cross for a short vacation in England.

Once such a trip might have aroused envy, but no more. The traveling salesman, the "lady buyer" for a department store, almost anybody may cross on a bigger, faster, finer boat than the Corsair at a very reasonable price.

THE WISE socialism is that which gives to the big crowd bigger and better ships, parks and hotels than any individual, no matter how rich, could afford for himself.

Also, among Americans of the right kind, a man and woman take pride in improving their own little house or boat, wasting no time in foolish envy of others. There is no real happiness of possession, except in what we earn and what we have.

SAMUEL FELITTO sat at the wheel of his taxicab yesterday, waiting for his customer to come out of a restaurant on Fulton street, New York, little boys were as thick around him as flies around a sugar bowl.

They stood on the running board, put their heads through the windows of the taxi, and all faces, including that of Samuel Felitto, expressed profound happiness.

The taxi radio was running and giving full details, inning by inning, play by play, of the great "al-star baseball game" that fifty-four thousand were watching in New York's Polo Grounds.

The customer appeared as the broadcaster roared "Medwick makes a home run, scoring three." The radio thunder of the fifty-four thousand "fans" could not drown the yells of the small taxicab audience, shrieking with delight.

There is a real miracle, and a very great marvel. Men become accustomed to everything, but the conquest of time, space and gravitation still surprises them.

EVERYTHING WOULD run smoothly if all the United States Representatives and Senators felt as G. A. Bryant, of West Virginia, feels. A candidate for Congress, his platform reads:

"I am behind President Roosevelt all the way. I'll jump off the top of the Washington Monument if he wants me to."

A solid House and Senate like that would make fascism unnecessary.

MR. BRYANT, educated as a civil engineer, and a professional newspaper man, recently "operator of peanut and popcorn stands," knows what depression means, and says:

"I am entering the campaign without a dime, and will be compelled to hitchhike and 'thumb' my way around."

We learn from adversity.

THE VATICAN PAPER, Osservatore Romano, properly rebukes the Hitler government for refusing religious consolation in their last hours to Catholics executed in the recent Nazi excitement. Osservatore says:

"Religious assistance in their last hours was refused, on the ground that the arrested persons were unworthy of it."

That will sound strange in America, where even murderers

CO-ED QUEEN STRICKEN AT TRYST

Secret Wedding Hinted For Girl Engaged To Another

NORMAN, Okla., July 11.—(AP.)—A campus death mystery with a beauty queen the victim and a pharmacy student and a fraternity house cook in leading roles baffled authorities here today.

Dead from undetermined causes was Marian Mills, 20-year-old daughter of Elbert M. Mills, an associate professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Questioned about the circumstances under which the girl's body was found in her home was Mrs. Hazel Brown, cook for a campus fraternity house.

COMPANION SOUGHT

The girl's companion during an overnight stay at the home of Mrs. Brown, Neal Myers, El Reno pharmacy student, is being sought. He disappeared after telephoning a physician to come to the house. County Attorney Paul Updegraff said:

"The circumstances are suspicious; it looks like murder."

He expressed the belief that the girl died as a result of an attempt to prevent motherhood.

The 39-year-old Mrs. Brown told a story of futile attempts to obtain medical aid for the girl, dating from last April, Updegraff said, and of a desperate resort to a "quack" preparation when the couple became frightened. Medicine associated with such cases was found in Mrs. Brown's home, the county attorney added. He said he asked the cook:

"When did Myers first tell you of her condition?"

YOUTH WORRIED

He quoted here as:

"It was in the spring, in April. He came to me and said he was in trouble about a girl. He wanted to know the name of a doctor. I suggested one in Oklahoma City. He came back in a day or two and said he had seen this doctor, but the doctor wanted $75 and he could not raise the money.

"I tried then and several times later to get him to go to his father. He said he would rather die.

"After that he just worried me to death about it."

On Monday, she said, according to Updegraff, Myers came to her, told her he had obtained a prescription from a Chickasha doctor and asked for a place to stay while the preparation was being taken. She agreed, and, according to the story, the girl began taking the medicine Monday afternoon, continuing at intervals until the time of her death.

Three physicians who made a post-mortem examination reported a conclusion must await chemical analysis of portions of the girl's body.

ENGAGED TO WED

Chosen in 1930 by Frederic March, movie star, as the university's "most beautiful" girl, Miss Mills also was elected "most popular." She was graduated last month, and was engaged to marry Bernard Doud, University of Oklahoma engineering student, who lives in Shreveport, La.

At El Reno, home of Myers, his mother said she had learned definitely that he and Miss Mills had been secretly married. She did not know, however, where or when the ceremony had taken place.

The father of the 21-year-old student, Dr. P. B. Myers, hurried to Norman and expressed the belief that Neal still is in town and will appear when he recovers from panic.

The girl had been beaten to death, police said.

VIENNA RENEWS WAR ON NAZIS

VIENNA, July 11.—(AP.)—Engelbert Dollfuss, Austria's fighting little Chancellor, announced a huge new drive against Nazis today after concentrating in his own hands all the military and police power of the nation.

The death penalty will be dealt out for the mere possession of explosives, Dollfuss announced, in an effort to stop widespread bombing outrages.

In a cabinet shakeup Dollfuss presented the resignation of the whole group to President Wilhelm Miklas and then submitted a new list for Miklas' approval.

Dollfuss appeared determined to stamp out the whole Nazi movement in Austria.

TIGHE PLANS TO QUIT AS UNION HEAD

'Rank and File' Ready To Offer Slate To Steel Men

President M. F. Tighe, veteran head of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, is seriously considering retiring from the union he has headed 15 years at the end of his present term, it was learned on good authority today.

Tighe, who is attending the wage conferences of his union with the Western Sheet and Tin Plate Manufacturers' Association, declined to comment on the reports other than to say:

"I have not yet reached a decision. In a few days I will make a statement regarding it. I have been too busy with the affairs of the organization to consider the personal side."

His decision will be based largely on what he sees as the need of his union. The veteran president wants to retire, it was learned, but if it is to the best interest of the union for him to remain as its head, he will do so.

The recent turbulent days in the steel industry and his age will be the reason for his retirement, it was understood. The decision of the Republic Steel Corporation not to take part in the wage conferences, being held in the William Penn Hotel, has had no part in the problem facing the 76-year-old union leader, it was learned from a reliable source.

'RANK AND FILE' SLATE

Meanwhile, leaders of the younger group—the "rank and file" or progressive element, as they term themselves—were preparing a new slate of officers which will be submitted at the end of this week, it was learned.

MISS FRANCES CASE

CAFE HELD UP DOWNTOWN

Two youthful robbers held up the owner of the Peoples' Grill at 628 Grant street early today and fled in an automobile after taking $100 from the cash register and a quantity of cigarets.

Sam Mantzoros, 34, of 3512 Victoria street, owner, and Frances Case, 615 Lincoln avenue, Bellevue, waitress, were alone when the bandits entered and covered Mantzoros with a gun. After warning both against an outcry, they emptied the cash register and departed.

Mantzoros said the robbers had entered the restaurant a few minutes earlier and ordered a cup of coffee. After leaving, one of the youths re-entered and demanded the money.

Detectives, investigating, said they believed the same pair was responsible for the holdup of the Blue Bell Restaurant at 1416 East Carson street an hour earlier.

George Hadzor, 6521 Llwellyn street, was by himself in the Carson street cafe when he was confronted by the holdup pair. They took $5 from him and then robbed the cash register of about $12, he reported.

VICE CHARGE DENIED BY MARSHALL

'I Never Got a Cent,' Police Head Sobs, Then Collapses

Police Supt. Ben R. Marshall, collapsed this afternoon when informed of the graft accusation made against him before the Police Research Commission yesterday.

Informed by a Sun-Telegraph reporter, the elderly superintendent who is on a six months' furlough, cried as he called upon God to witness his denial that he ever received a penny in graft during his 25 years' police service.

Recuperating from a stomach ailment in a relative's home at Dayton, Pa., Marshall was forced to retur to his sick bed after declaring to the reporter:

"If I never speak another word and if I were to die tonight, I ever received a dollar from any racketeer, any woman or from any one else."

VOICE TREMBLES

Stretching his shaking hands to arms length, Marshall spoke in a voice trembling with emotion:

"My doctors tell me it will two to six months before I am well enough to leave here, but my only hope is that God will give me the strength to appear beforethe research commission before they adjourn so that I can answer any and every question they ask me."

Notified of the possibility that City Council may act to oust him as superintendent after previously voting him a six months' leave with pay, Marshall asserted:

"I can explain any thing. I never had a collector—Frank R.

'Let Mellons Support School,' Governor Tells Chancellor

(Text of Gov. Pinchot's letter to Dr. Bowman appears on Page 8.)

Gov. Pinchot in Harrisburg today stepped into the controversy over the dismissal of Dr. Ralph E. Turner from the University of Pittsburgh faculty by threatening a legislative investigation, while Dr. Turner issued a denial to Chancellor John G. Bowman's explanation that the professor had been "fired" for "sneering at religion."

Gov. Pinchot sent a harsh letter to the Chancellor, and in no mincing language criticized what he termed the apparent policy of the university in denying its professors their constitutional guarantee of free speech.

MELLONS LINKED

The Governor indicated his belief that the university bowed to the Mellon interests, and said if such is the case, the university should not be supported by public funds. The Governor wrote:

"If the Mellons want a school to teach their ideas, then let them support it. The commonwealth cannot."

Dr. Turner, in his reply to Chancellor Bowman, reiterated his charge that his dismissal came as a result of his activities in the Pennsylvania Security League in behalf of social and labor legislation.

Chancellor Bowman, in an answer to a letter from Congressman Henry Ellenboken asking why the professor had been released from the teaching staff, quoted Dr. Turner as sneering at members of his classes who attended Sunday school.

Dr. Turner denied the quotation specifically and any hostility towards religion.

Dr. Turner said the Chancellor's "belated explanation seems to me only to add to the confusion which clusters about the actual reason for my dismissal." He said:

"I wish to deny that I ever used such terms as attributed to me by Dr. Bowman.

"I feel that I am entitled to

COURT STUDIES FINLEY OUSTER

Judge Samuel H. Gardner today reserved decision on Charles A. Finley's application to make permanent a temporary injunction restraining Mayor McNair from interfering with his chairmanship of the Traction Conference Board.

With McNair attending the hearing in shirt sleeves, but leaving the talking to his lawyer, the argument revolved about the exact nature of the office held by Finley.

Ward Bonsall, counsel for the Mayor, argued it is a public office and the Mayor has the power to remove Finley.

C. Elmer Bown, Finley's attorney, contended the office is private and that removal must come under terms of the contract which set up the board. This contract states that removal can be made by the Mayor, with consent of a majority of Council.

Judge Gardner asked for briefs and said he wanted to study the question of jurisdiction and determine whether the case is one for a court of equity, or if it should go to another court under quo warranto proceedings.

McNair lost one point when Judge Gardner refused to hear

OAKLAND, Cal., July 11.—Two women, Miss Adella Merrill, 73, and Miss Nellie Foote, 59, were found beaten to death here today in the boarding house which they operated for women only.

Their bodies were discovered by one of the boarders, Mrs. Emma Harris, in their bed. They had slept together since last March when Miss Merrill was badly beaten by a mysterious intruder.

Police believe the murders were committed by someone who mistakenly thought Miss Merrill kept large sums of money around the house.

Pittsburgher Now Looms As New Steel King

CLEVELAND, July 11.—(AP.)—Out of the steel industry's newest merger deal there is arising, some steel men believe, another Pittsburgher as the heir apparent to the "crown" once worn by Charles M. Schwab and the late Judge Elbert H. Gary.

The pending merger of the Corrigan-McKinney Steel Company into the Republic Steel Corporation, with an estimated $33,000,000 involved, brings to the forefront Tom M. Girdler, Republic's president and chairman, as the newest potential occupant of the industry's "throne."

Today, steel men say, he has only one rival—Bethlehem Steel's president, the soft-spoken Eugene G. Grace.

Years ago, whenever steel leaders gathered, it was Judge Gary's voice which dominated and ruled. Schwab succeeded to the throne when Gary died, but has become less active in recent years, and has apparently left the scepter for new hands to grasp.

Girdler's success is credited much to his knowledge of the business from the bottom to the top. After leaving Lehigh University in 1900 as a mechanical engineer, he sold heating and ventilating equipment in London, then turned up with the ancient Oliver Iron and Steel Company.

About four years later he went with the Rockefeller-owned Colorado Iron and Steel Company. A six months' turn with the Atlanta Steel Company was followed by a call to Pittsburgh to the Jones and Laughlin Steel Company, largest of the independents in eastern territory. He joined that company in 1914, was general manager by 1923, and president by 1928.

In 1929, when Cyrus S. Eaton, Cleveland financier, was welding a group of small companies into the present Republic Steel, Eaton chose Girdler as the man to run it.

'Never Take Me Alive,' Girl Slayer Warns

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 11.—(AP.)—"To whom it may concern: I'll never be taken alive," was Helen Spence Eaton's grim warning to prison officials as they searched today for the comely White River country girl, slayer of two men, who made her fourth escape from the state farm for women near here yesterday.

The note was found in the 22-year-old fugitive's locker this morning as a posse led by two bloodhounds combed the countryside between the women's farm and the White River country where prison officials believe she is headed.

Helen, who dislikes cigareta, but smokes an occasional cigar despite her complete femininity in appearance and manner, is armed with a pistol which she stole from the night watchman's room as she left the narrow rows of a prison farm strawberry patch to strike the road to freedom.

GERMANY DEPRESSED BY NEW ANGLO-FRENCH ALLIANCE

ENEMY ARMY REINFORCED ON FRONTIER

Berlin Sees Menace In English Backing For Barthou

B. R. KNICKERBOCKER
International News Service.
(Copyright, 1934, International News Serv.)

BERLIN, July 11.—The French army has been heavily reinforced on the German frontier, Louis Barthou, French Foreign Minister, in London appears already to have gained considerable English sympathy for his plan to weave a steel net around Germany.

These two facts today remained depressing reflections for this country after 12 days have passed without the public's learning any new details of the plot which cost the lives of an undetermined number of Germans and without any lists of the dead.

But of the two major facts the second is by far the more important. The French army's frontier reinforcements were precautionary measures and no sober observer believes France ready to attack Germany this moment. Barthou's seemingly successful diplomatic labors appear to Germany's leaders today much more dangerous.

3-POINT PROGRAM

International News Service learned today that Barthou's complete plan consists of three parts, first a renewal of the old or "West" Locarno pact with the Soviet Union as a new guarantor of Franco-German frontier.

The second is the proposed new "East" Locarno pact among France, the Soviet Union, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and the Baltic States with Germany, too, if she will enter it.

The third is the proposed "Mediterranean" Locarno among France, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania, Greece and Turkey.

The gist of the old West Locarno was a promise by England and Italy to come to the aid of the victim of an attack by either France or Germany over the Franco-German frontier. What France wants above everything today is not mere reaffirmation of the old Locarno by England. She gets that nearly every week in Parliament. What France wants is renewal of England's engagement to stand by her if Germany attacks.

SEES NEW PROMISE

Now Barthou believes he can get a new promise from England by re-writing the old or West Locarno and bringing the Soviet Union in as a new guarantor. Because of her military and geographical situation, remote from France, it is hard to imagine how the Soviet Union could be of any help. But Barthou hopes to use the Soviet Union's entry into the pact as bait to get a new promise out of England.

The Soviet Union in turn is willing to enter the West Locarno pact if France can induce Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and the Baltic states to enter the East Locarno pact. More than that, the Soviet Union will become a member of the League of Nations, if France can bring about the East Locarno.

It would suit France perfectly if Germany would enter the Eastern Locarno. But Germany probably will not consent to become her own jailer.

FRENCH NET OF STEEL

Germany realizes that Barthou's plan is an extremely cleverly disguised but effective net of steel around her border.

Its success would mean the indefinite perpetuation of that status quo laid down in the Versailles treaty. Germany could not move to extend her frontiers without bringing down all Europe on her head.

This looks bad to Germany today, but there are two important hurdles for Barthou to take even if he succeeds in lining up England. He has got to get Poland's consent to the East Locarno for without Poland, it would have no meaning. He has got to get Italy's consent to the Mediterranean pact. Neither country has been favorable to France's bloc policy.

Hitler is nervous today, but old privy councillors of the German foreign office are watching Barthou and privately commenting:

"Let the old man wear himself out. He will soon run out of wind."

HITLER TO TALK ON AUSTRIA

By TOM WILHELM
International News Service.

BERLIN, July 11.—Chancellor Adolf Hitler's address to the all-Nazi Reichstag Friday will include an important announcement on the Austrian situation, made the more acute by the shakeup of the Dollfuss cabinet, it became known in official circles today.

Other points on which Hitler, who was busy today writing the speech, will touch on, according to official circles, are: Germany's answer to the political bloc system being built up by the French Foreign Minister, Louis Barthou, a convincing statement on Germany's desire for peace, and a declaration of Germany's willingness to co-operate with the nations of the world to that end.

His speech may include a discussion of the "foreign power" repeatedly charged with conspiring with the late Gen. Kurt von Schleicher, who with his wife was killed "resisting arrest," by police, and who subsequently was charged with conspiracy against Hitler in the government-controlled press.

Vice Chancellor von Papen was reported today as determined to quit the cabinet and even to leave the country.

Germany in Parley On Lithuanian Feud

BERLIN, July 11.—(AP.)—Foreign Minister Konstantin von Neurath today received the Ambassadors of Japan, Italy, England and France to impress upon them the necessity of intervention in the Memel territory of Lithuania by powers signatory to the Treaty of Versailles.

testimony that Finley collected three separate salaries from the city for a time while holding the traction conference board job.

Theodore L. Moritz, the Mayor's three-job secretary, whom McNair tried to install in Finley's office last Saturday, also attended the hearing. Six times McNair has moved to fire Finley, and each time Council has voted down his appointees.

Bensall said that Finley was retained as Director of Public Works under former Mayor William A. Magee until 1926, although his traction board appointment was made March 16, 1924.

Following testimony that McNair swore in Moritz as chairman of the board while Council was in recess, Judge Gardner quoted from a section of the traction conference agreement:

"City members may be removed only by consent of a majority vote of City Council."

Six times McNair has moved to fire Finley and each time Council has voted down his appointees.

Attorney Bonsall countered by quoting another clause in the agreement:

"Each member shall hold office at the pleasure of the party appointing him."

IVY LEE IN PAY OF GERMAN FIRM

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—For expert advice on improving German-American trade relations, Ivy L. Lee, who interprets John D. Rockefeller to the public, was engaged by a German chemical firm at an annual salary of $25,000, it was revealed today.

Lee's testimony was in the form of a deposition examined at a special executive session of the congressional sub-committee which is investigating un-American activities.

James Lee, the committee said, is his father's contact man in Germany at a salary of $33,000 a year, in which capacity he sends here "literature or propaganda from the German chemical company officials as well as government officials." Reciprocating, Ivy Lee supplies his son with various reports, the committee stated.

fuss will add several cabinet portfolios to his active duties.

He will be Chancellor, Foreign Minister, Minister of Defense, Public Security and Agriculture.

A communique asserted the step was necessary for peace and order and to wipe out "the last vestiges of treasonable movement."

Almost daily bombings and other acts of terrorism have kept the government nervous for months. Austrian Nazis were blamed by Dollfuss supporters. They are bitter foes because of the Chancellor's unrelenting opposition to a union with Germany.

OPPOSITION ELEMENTS

Opposition elements to Dollfuss include Socialists and Communists, as well as the Nazis, although the Socialists were all but crushed in February. Scores of them were killed.

In commenting on Chancellor Hitler's "purging" in Germany, Dollfuss said:

"Does not the light at last dawn upon us that one cannot make a people happy with violent methods?"

In remaking the government Dollfuss crippled the power of the Fascist Heimwehr, or Home Guard, which gained government favor by yeoman work during the bloody Socialist revolution in February, although previously no great lover of Dollfuss.

The Heimwehr leaders, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, vice chancellor, and Maj. Emil Fey, minister of public security, will remain in the government but Fey will surrender power.

PINCHOT LEADS DRIVE AGAINST UNSAFE AUTOS

Drivers, Mechanics Both Responsible, Governor Warns

HARRISBURG, July 11.—(AP.)—A campaign to force every unsafe automobile off Pennsylvania's highways was announced today by Gov. Pinchot. The Governor declared:

"The teeth of the compulsory inspection law have been sharpened and bared. During the next three months indifferent motorists and careless mechanics are going to feel their effects."

The Governor said common sense demands the motorist be aware of any mechanical weakness in his car, asserting:

"If he isn't, or if he ignores the warning given by smooth tires, slipping brakes or flickering headlights, that is his responsibility. He is as much liable for resulting accidents as if he toyed with a shotgun without first learning whether it was loaded.

"The inspection station mechanic who slaps an official sticker on a car without making all the tests required by law shares with the motorist the blame for accidents caused by mechanical defects. In some cases, the greater responsibility lies with the mechanic."

The executive said there is "no excuse" for permitting mechanically unsafe cars to operate, continuing:

"An automobile, even when in perfect running condition, is potentially dangerous. Careless motorists are cracking up thousands of perfectly safe cars every month. We cannot allow the additional menace of defective cars to exist."

In the campaign every owner who permits an unsafe motor vehicle to operate runs the risk of losing his license. The proprietor of every garage in which inspections are made in a haphazard manner will lose his right to operate as an official station.

PINCHOT BACKS 'RELIEF SHOES'

HARRISBURG, July 11.—(AP.)—Gov. Pinchot says evidence before the State Emergency Relief Board shows "clearly" the composition shoe soles which Pennsylvania is buying for its needy are "better" than leather soles. The Governor said after a board hearing:

"I wish it was not so, because I would like to help the tanners of our state."

Pennsylvania tanners recently protested the purchase of composition soles from firms outside the state. The state's shoe bill approximates $136,000 per month.

John M. Flynn, of Elk County, said it is "almost unthinkable" the leather manufacturers of the state are "not even given a chance to bid" on the relief shoes. Auditor General Frank E. Baldwin said he favors giving the tanners an opportunity to bid.

Helen Wills Moody Sailing for Home

LONDON, July 11.—(INS.)—Helen Wills Moody embarked for New York today on the liner Bremen. She had been reporting the international tennis matches at Wimbledon.

Miss Helen Jacobs, the American singles champion, and Miss Virginia Rice, of Boston, sailed aboard the Olympic. Both had recovered from throat trouble which attacked them after the Wimbledon championships.

FUMES BLAMED IN PLANE CRASH

KINGSTON, N. Y., July 11.—(AP.)—A new theory, asphyxiation, was advanced by Dr. Victor Q. Bourke, Sullivan County Coroner, as the cause for the crash of the American Airlines airplane against Last Chance Mountain in the Catskills June 9, killing seven persons.

Dr. Bourke, testifying at an inquest into the tragedy yesterday, said he believed the giant liner had traveled 20 to 40 miles with a "dead stick," meaning no one at the controls. He added the ship was 52 miles off its course, and continued:

"Heating pipes ran through the cabins from the nose of the ship to the tail. These drew warmth from the motors. monoxide gas could have leaped from the exhaust to mix with the vapor in the pipe, overcoming the four passengers and the crew of three."

Testifying that her husband threatened her life when she refused to drink and smoke while entertaining visitors at a party, Mrs. Virginia Braun Northangel, of 304 Middle street, Wilkinsburg, today was granted a divorce. Her husband, Charles E. Northangel, lives in Indiana, Pa. The couple was married in 1927.

Files Suit

LUPE VELEZ
Miss Velez, the screen actress, whose long-heralded suit for divorce from Johnny Weissmuller today was filed in the courts.

LUPE DIVORCING HER 'TARZAN'

HOLLYWOOD, July 11.—(AP.)—The tempestuous romance of Lupe Velez and Johnny Weissmuller, riddled with quarrels, separations and reconciliations, today went on the skids to the divorce courts.

The fiery Mexican actress, who has talked of divorce before during separations from her athletic actor-husband, filed suit today charging Weissmuller with cruelty.

Miss Velez said:

"We just didn't get along. Our temperaments are not suited to each other. We will remain very good friends. Johnny is a nice boy and I am sorry this had to happen. I guess everybody gets a divorce in Hollywood, so why not Lupe?"

Reminded of other reconciliations, Miss Velez said with emphasis that there was no possibility of such a step this time, a prediction she has made before.

PARTY MURDER CASE PRESSED

SAN FRANCISCO, July 11.—(AP.)—The state today set out in earnest to pin the murder of pretty Louise Jeppesen, Ogden, Utah, on 45-year-old Millard Hickman, San Francisco marine engineer.

Before a jury of eight men and four women Prosecutor Peter Mullins planned a parade of witnesses to the stand in an effort to bolster the state's circumstantial case. Hickman is accused of strangling Miss Jeppesen to death in Golden Gate Park May 13 after a gay drinking party.

Apparent in the cross-examination of witnesses by the defense was the importance the time element will play in the attempt to save Hickman from the gallows.

Police have fixed the approximate time of the slaying at about 4 o'clock in the morning, while Hickman expects to prove that at that hour he was with Miss Blanche McKay in his apartment. Miss McKay is to be called as a defense witness.

Rifle Explodes, Wounds Girl, 18

ALTOONA, Pa., July 11.—Her curiosity about the old big game rifle in the living room of her home today had put Agnes Smith, 18, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bent Smith, of Cresson, in Mercy Hospital here.

The girl started to examine the rifle when it suddenly discharged, striking her in the thorax and tearing one of her shoulder blades. Doctors at the hospital described her condition as "fair."

RENO GAMBLER ACCUSED IN SWINDLE

Got 'Bunco Swag' Cut 'Steerer' Testifies At Trial

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—Noble John Moore, admitted swindler, told a federal jury today that he and others regularly paid William J. Graham 15 per cent of their bunco swag for police protection and "no-question" banking service in Reno, Nev.

Moore told of four instances in which he handed money to Graham to be kept until victims were herded out of town and then divided, Graham keeping the 15 per cent.

He did not name Graham's fellow gambling promoter, James C. McKay, except to say:

"It was the general understanding that 15 per cent was to go to McKay and Graham."

McKay and Graham are charged with misuse of the mails in a scheme to defraud. On trial with them is John Erlenton, accused as one of the many "feelers."

Moore was a defendant in the trial, but pleaded guilty immediately after a jury was chosen last Thursday.

The Riverside Bank of Reno, of which George Wingfield, Nevada copper king, is president, was named by Moore as a "right jug." He explained that the ordinary banker would be suspicious of any large transaction and would notify police. A "right jug," he said, was a bank in which no questions were asked.

Moore explained also that the swindle operators took their victims to Reno only when they were unable to fleece them elsewhere, either because police protection was necessary or because bankers elsewhere refused to carry out large transactions without watching out for the interest of the victim. He said:

"It was merely a question of whether we were willing to give up 15 per cent."

He related the details of four swindles in which he played the part of "steerer," that is the man who makes the pick-up and steers the victim to the proper scene for the blow-off."

STATE AND COUNTY POLICE TO FORM REGATTA GUARD

Officers to Patrol River Course And Roads

State and county police, on both river and roads, will guard the safety of visitors and participants at the Sun-Telegraph and Oakmont Boat Club's first annual motorboat regatta at Oakmont Saturday and Sunday.

State police will be on hand to patrol the roads converging on Oakmont and facilitate the arrival of the thousands of guests at the outboard classic.

Two county police officers, in a fast motorboat, will patrol the Allegheny River, keeping out of range of the racers but watching the safety of participants and protecting the thousands lined along the banks.

Action to this extent was taken yesterday by the County Commissioners following the appearance of a committee from the Oakmont Boat Club. The men will remain on duty both days of the event.

A group of racing drivers and club officials who will take part in the two-day regatta will describe their impressions of the coming event over the air at 7 p. m. tonight from Radio Station WCAE.

The regatta, intended to stimulate interest in aquatic sports here, will begin Saturday at 2 p. m. and Sunday at 1 p. m., according to Dr. J. Staunton Saling, chairman.

C. A. HEYMERS E. C. STILES
Mr. Heymers, club official, using the checkered flag (used to signal the winner), and Mr. Stiles the starting cannon with which they will start and signal the ends of motorboat races at Oakmont.

100,000 Expected to See Races at Oakmont

Arrangements are under way to care for a crowd of 100,000. To smooth entrance to the scene, a map will be published within a day or two showing roads which will bypass Pittsburgh.

For the spectators the regatta promises to provide thrills of every description. The long oval course extending upriver and downriver from the boat club and the judges' barge will give everyone along both banks a perfect view of the races. Sixteen five-mile races will be run during the two days, so evenly divided as to heats that the same entertainment will be provided on the second day as on the first.

Actress, 23, Sues Ex-Husband, 74

LOS ANGELES, July 11.—(AP.)—Asserting she contracted a permanent lung ailment during her five weeks' honeymoon with her wealthy 74-year-old former husband, Dr. Chester M. Sutton, Mrs. Rosa Sutton, 23, actress, today had filed a $100,000 damage suit against the physician.

Mrs. Sutton, who has appealed the annulment granted Dr. Sutton in 1930 a few weeks after the marriage, asserted the illness has destroyed her stage career.

Hitler Only Thyssen's Tool, Author Says

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—The "real prime mover of German Fascism," says Ernst Henri in his book—"Hitler Over Europe"—is not Hitler but Thyssen, the great magnate of the Ruhr." The book was publishd today.

Ernst Henri is a pseudonym, and the publishers (Simon & Schuster, New York) declare they bought the book from an English publisher and do not know his identity. They point out he obviously is someone familiar with the detail of German political and financial life.

Henri says:

"The real father of this group (the Thyssen steel-coal trust) is none other than Stinnes, that old king of the Ruhr who, from 1914 to 1918, was the most prominent war monger in Germany.

"Thyssen, since 1927—the year in which he and Vogler were received in Rome by Mussolini—has been a member, the chief financier and the real inspirer of the Hitler party. Hitler took no important step without first consulting Thyssen and his friends.

"Thyssen systematically financed all election funds of the National Socialist party. He it was who in 1929 invited Hitler to Dusseldorf, the headquarters of the steel trust, and there introduced him for the first time to an assembly of 300 leading industrialists of the Ruhr."

Henri calls Thyssen "the new feudal lord," who governs Germany from the Ruhr, and points out that a wave of price fixing cartels has swept Germany of late. The price to leap first of all and to the greatest extent is that of those products coming from Thyssen's territory, he says.

Defense Ray to Kill At 100 Miles Invented

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—Discovery of a force ray that would destroy an army 100 miles away, making a nation's defenses impregnable, has been announced by the inventor, Dr. Nikola Tesla.

In the interests of peace, Dr. Tesla said, he plans to place the ray at the disposal of the Geneva disarmament conference. He announced the invention yesterday on the occasion of his seventy-eighth birthday.

The force ray, Dr. Tesla said, would consist of particles, driven electrically and projected in vast curtains, miles high and 100 miles long.

The speed of the particles—traveling at velocities of 50,000,000 volts—was described by him as giving the ray its destructive powers.

He said projecting plants, set up every 200 miles along a border, each shooting rays 100 miles on each side, would make the border impenetrable.

A fleet of 10,000 airplanes, flying into such a curtain, he said, would be destroyed.

Dr. Tesla gave only a general description of the apparatus, asserting that the force ray involved scientific advances hitherto scarcely conceived.

LEADERS LAUD HEARST STAND ON MOVIES

Church, School Heads Praise Editorial On Clean Films

Pittsburgh educational, religious and civic leaders today hailed William Randolph Hearst's editorial giving his "Stand on the Fight for Clean Pictures."

Among them was Right Rt. Rev. Alexander Mann, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese. Praising the Hearst newspapers for taking up "the cudgel in behalf of Christian morality and commmon decency," he said:

"I have read Mr. Hearst's editorial concerning the moving pictures with great interest and very hearty approval.

"In my judgment it means much when a great newspaper with so wide a circulation takes up the cudgel in behalf of Christian morality and common decency.

"In this connection I should like to express my sincere appreciation of the movement in the great Roman Catholic Church, commonly known as the Legion of Decency, and my hope is that every Christian communion in the country and also our fellow citizens of the Jewish faith will co-operate to the limit in this action of the Roman Church.

"Newspapers reach thousands of American readers who never attend a church service, and in this way the newspaper addresses a public far in excess of what the church, at present, is able to do. In my opinion the thanks of all good Americans are due and should be gladly paid to Mr. Hearst for the stand which he, through his newspapers, has taken."

Mrs. Mary T. Horan, president of the Pittsburgh Council of Catholic Women, which has a membership of almost 15,000 women in this section, said:

"The Catholic women of the diocese of Pittsburgh have been working unceasingly for the last few years for clean movies, books and magazines, and we are delighted now to have the clergy of all denominations and the press help wage the fight for clean motion pictures.

"The very fine and encouraging editorial by Mr. Hearst will be an inspiration to us in carrying on the work of securing pledges for the Legion of Decency. Thousands of women in Greater Pittsburgh have already signed these pledges, and I feel sure that thousands more will now sign them in the future."

Dr. Ben G. Graham, superintendent of Pittsburgh schools, declared:

"Mr. Hearst is to be commended for his statement of Monday, July 9, concerning the fight for clean pictures. Our public schools are devoting much time to character training and emphasizing in our instruction preparation for citizenship, but our efforts in this direction are hopeless when counteracted by the life which our pupils see pictured on the modern screen.

"Moving picture films and sound pictures are among the best instruments for education which have been produced to date, and, if motion picture producers will turn their attention to the creation of a clean type of picture, the work of the schools in character training will be reinforced and not nullified as at present.

"The recent phenomenal success of "Little Women" is proof that the public will support a type of moving picture which is helpful rather than harmful to the youth of America."

Dr. C. E. Dickey, superintendent of county schools, said:

"I am heartily and thoroughly in sympathy with Mr. Hearst's fine stand against indecent motion pictures.

"I think the church, the schools, our social agencies and our press should all combine to protect our children against the nastiness of many of our motion pictures.

"There are many noble, clean and inspiring things that they could portray instead of indecency. I am pleased to see Mr. Hearst carry on such a movement."

UNCLEAN FILMS HIT AT C. E. MEET

HERSHEY, Pa., July 11.—(AP.)—Movies that "reek with sexual filth" were assailed at the nineteenth biennial session of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union by Dr. Ralph Hutchison, president of Washington and Jefferson College. The convention continues today.

Dr. Hutchison said last night "sex picturs" and those depicting gangster depravity and emotional debauchery are flaunted on all sides."

He asserted that while "not approving either the motive or the results" of prohibition, gambling and Sunday observance law repeals, "I do think it will be a good thing for the church" in awakening a sense of responsibility.

The educator charged a "deliberate campaign" is on to make Sunday a day of "financial profit for operators of commercial amusements."

Movie Men Map Own Film 'Laundry' Plans

Executives to Meet For Decision On Cleanup

International News Service.

HOLLYWOOD, July 11.—The $2,000,000,000 movie industry will reach its decision for action on the nation-wide demand to launder the screen in a momentous conference to be held within the next 48 hours, it was learned today.

Will Hays, movie "czar," will preside at the meeting of all major producers as soon as he finishes his personal survey of the studios.

What steps will be taken, in addition to the edict already announced making Joseph I. Breen, Hays' assistant, a one-man censor board, were problematical.

The movie producers must face the ultimatum of the Legion of Decency, which started under Roman Catholic auspices and rapidly spread to Protestant and Jewish faiths:

"Produce clean films or face financial ruin."

The Legion of Decency is prepared to back its edicts with a boycott. Already exhibitors of "blacklisted" films have felt the pinch of diminishing crowds, and their clamor to the Hollywood producers, augmented by the threats of church leaders, have thrown Hollywood into a furore.

It was expected that resistance would be shown to any effort to oust Hays as head of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. A prominent executive said:

"The rumor that Mr. Hays will resign is absurd. He has the whole-hearted support of the entire industry, and he has an iron-clad contract which does not expire until 1936.

"He has made it plain, and he is seeking again to make it plain to film executives, that the Producers' Association's attitude is that the customer is right—the customer in this case being the voice of the combined churches."

Working at top speed, Hays has conferred with all the important executives over their production plans for the coming fiscal year—plans that have already shown a preference for adventure films, historical subjects, and outdoor romances— and has viewed uncompleted portions of many films.

His findings will be laid before the conference of executives, expected to be called for late today or sometime tomorrow.

Trafford City Man Robbed by Pair

FILM PAIR FIGHT MORALS CASE IN COURT

Casting Chief, Gi[rl] Charge 'Frame[up]' On Stand

LOS ANGELES, July 11.—(A.P.)—Dave Allen and Gloria Marsh, Hollywood motion picture figures, will testify in their defense against charges of violating a statute pertaining to the public morals, their lawyers disclosed today as they returned to the tedious task of selecting a jury to hear the trial.

The lawyers said both will reiterate statements that the charges are a "frameup" to cause Allen to lose his position as executive head of the General Casting Corporation, Hollywood agency which supplies extra players to the motion picture studios. Miss Marsh is an attractive extra.

Deputy District Attorney Arthur Veitch said his star witness, June Delong, another film extra in whose apartment the offense was alleged to have occurred last April, will be held until near the close of the state's case. Her testimony before the grand jury resulted in the indictment against Allen and Miss Marsh.

A section of the courtroom was set aside for representatives of various reform organizations which have interested themselves in the trial with the avowed intention of attending all sessions.

STUDIO AFLAME, GARBO ABSENT

CULVER CITY, Cal., July 11.—(AP.)—Greta Garbo possibly smiled an enigmatic smile as the Culver City fire department experienced a great disappointment.

Receiving a call to extinguish a fire on the Garbo set at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio here yesterday, the firemen donned their tin hats and rubber boots and raced to the scene of the conflagration.

When they arrived at the studio, firemen received two disappointing reports—the mysterious Garbo had gone to lunch and the blaze had been put out by studio firemen.

Miss Garbo and Herbert Marshall were making a picture. Miss Garbo went to lunch early and technicians started to work on the set, an interior of an Austrian home. The sound proofing between the stages caught fire.

MAE WEST FILM TITLE IRKS CITY

NEW ORLEANS, July 11.—(AP.)—New Orleans was up in arms today over the reported intention of changing the name of Mae West's latest picture from "It Ain't No Sin," to "The Belle of New Orleans."

Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley lodged an official complaint, while the Association of Commerce, the Kiwanis Club, the New Orleans Federation of Clubs and the New Orleans Council for Better Films also filed complaints.

Producers of the picture had changed the title from "It Ain't No Sin," to "The St. Louis Woman," but when too many protests came from that city it was renamed "The Belle of New Orleans."

PRINCE HENRY'S FUNERAL HELD

THE HAGUE, July 11.—(AP.)—Henry, Prince Consort of the Netherlands, was buried today with impressive rites. A throng of mourning Hollanders estimated at 300,000 lined the route of the funeral procession.

Queen Wilhelmina and Princess Juliana, widow and daughter of the Prince, remained at the palace until the procession passed, then drove five miles to Delft in closed motor cars. They were dressed in white.

The hearse was followed by six coaches bearing the Duke Adolf of Mecklenburg, brother of the late Prince; the Earl of Athlone, the Grand Duke Oldenburg, Prince Charles of Belgium and other dignitaries.

The church at Delft was the scene of solemn tribute in the presence of all members of the government, parliamentarians, and numerous distinguished persons.

PONZI BATTLES DEPORTATION

BOSTON, July 11.—(AP.)—Charles Ponzi, immigrant boy whose financial jugglery made millions for himself and reduced thousands of others to penilessness, moved swiftly today to save himself from deportation on the eve of the execution of the order.

The erstwhile "wizzard" filed a petition with Gov. Joseph B. Ely asking for a full pardon for the offense for which he served a term in state's prison. If granted, the grounds for deportation back to his native Italy would be automatically removed, and Ponzi would be free to remain in the country in which he has lived for 31 years, soaring to fame and fortune and crashing to disgrace and imprisonment.

Granddad's 'Bike' Fails to Throw Grinning Wales

COVENTRY, England, July 11.—(AP.)—A high-wheeled tricycle that once belonged to King Edward VII was trundled up and down the yard of an automobile plant here yesterday by his grandson, the Prince of Wales.

In front of a cheering crowd of workers Prince Edward mounted the ancient vehicle and pedaled about 60 yards, grinning widely.

As the prince, inspecting the plant, he observed the tricycle, kept here as a curiosity, and asked if he could ride it. He did—without a fall.

MRS. ROOSEVELT SHUNS CROWD

International News Service.

CHICAGO, July 11.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, wife of the President, is determined to see A Century of Progress without fanfare or homage or crowds and will stay in Chicago until she has done so.

Asked how long she planned to remain here, Mrs. Roosevelt answered:

"I will try to see the fair comfortably today. If it's impossible, then I'll stay until I do."

The First Lady was obviously irked at the tenacity of Chicago reporters who followed her at a 60-mile-per-hour pace last night when she attempted to lose them as she sped to the home of Dr. James Breasted, head of the Oriental Institute at the University of Chicago, to dine.

Mrs. Roosevelt hoped to be just a "plain citizen" today and browse to her heart's content about the fair grounds.

ROOSEVELT ON CANAL CRUISE

CRISTOBAL, Canal Zone, July 11.—(AP.)—President Roosevelt's cruiser, the U. S. S. Houston, dropped anchor in the harbor here today and received aboard Secretary of War George H. Dern, preparatory to a trip of inspection through the Panama Canal.

The war secretary, who is in charge of the Canal Zone, described the canal as not only a vital factor in national defense, but also as "the greatest of non-military activities."

The President came on deck early to witness the trip through the gigantic canal connecting two oceans. Shortly after 10 o'clock the Houston started through the canal.

3 FOUND DEAD, BABY WOUNDED

BOSTON, July 11.—(AP.)—Three members of a family were found shot to death today in their home in the Hyde Park district, and a fourth, a baby, was critically wounded—the victims, police said, of a double slaying and a suicide.

John J. Gidney, 55, a letter carrier, police said, shot his daughter, Margaret Borgeson, 19; her husband, Ernest, 20, and their 6-month-old child, Estelle, through the head, and then turned the gun on himself.

All with the exception of the child were dead when found. The child is not expected to live.

The tragedy was a result of domestic troubles.

LIFE AS 'GIRLS' BALKED BY PARENTS

Doctors 'Kind,' but Pair Sees No Hope For Cripples

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., July 11.—Two boys with healthy, alert minds, but with bodies warped and twisted by a baffling disease, today calmly await the death they know will come to them within two years.

They and their parents have rejected the one heroic experiment their physician thinks might have helped them, by effecting a reversal of their sex.

Glenn Deitrich, 18, and his brother, John Wade Deitrich, 16, unconcernedly work at drawing paper and crayons on the porch of their farm house at Belmont, near here, while their predicament puzzles medical men from coast to coast.

Their mother, Mrs. Alice Deitrich, still able to smile after her 20-year-long battle against the malady that already has taken her third son, Samuel, has reconciled herself to the boys' fate and is "through with treatments."

SEES NO HOPE

To the suggestion that she permit the boys to undergo a sex-changing operation, Mrs. Deitrich took this stand:

"The doctors always have been kind to us, but there is nothing they can do for my boys. It's been hard, but with God's help we will get along."

Their father, Adolph Deitrich, a farmer who looks young for his 54 years, was equally firm in his opposition to the sex-reversal proposal:

"I know there is no hope for those boys. They may live a while longer, but they will die like Samuel. He died four years ago, when he was 17.

"It's not that I'm opposed to this new-fangled sex treatment so much, but if they monkey with those boys it'll mean that they will be laid up in bed and suffer."

TREATMENT ADVISED

The sex reversal treatment was recommended to the family physician, Dr. E. W. Turner, of Belmont, in letters by unnamed writers from Washington and Richmond, Va.

Dr. Turner, who attended the birth of Mrs. Deitrich's three children and has treated their minor ills, believes if the sex change had been made even six years ago it might have prolonged the boys' lives, or even saved them, but he doubts its efficacy now.

Dr. Turner consulted with the boys' parents and explained the treatment but agreed with their decision not to make use of it now, he explained.

Dr. H. R. Jeffrey, who has been practicing medicine in Morristown 45 years and who attended Ross and Howard Tracey, is convinced that sex has a "lot to do" with the cause and furtherance of the disease which expresses itself in the form of spinal paralysis.

SPORT REFEREE HELD IN FIGHT

A favorite Pitt and Tech basketball referee, Dan Brickley, 38, of 2951 Stafford street, Shreaden, today is under $2,500 bail, accused of beating D. J. Dillon, 40, of 2824 Philadelphia avenue, Dormont.

Brickley offered no defense at his hearing last night before Justice of the Peace Anthony Ferraro, of Sharpsburg, when Dillon charged him with assault and battery, following an argument at the office of the West Penn Power Company, where both are employed.

The two argued over a telephone call in the company's office, Dillon told Ferraro, and company officials sent Brickley home. Later, Brickley lay in wait for him and beat him unconscious, Dillon, testified, according to Ferraro.

Modern Brides Don't Blush; Swains Do

QUINCY, Mass., July 11.—(AP.)—It's the bridegroom who blushes, not the bride, says City Clerk Emery L. Crane.

Few brides-to-be blush nowadays when they apply for their marriage intentions, Crane reports. He has observed much blushing and stuttering by prospective bridegrooms.

Girl 'Bridegroom' Loses To Law, Sent to Muncy

HARRISBURG, July 11.—(AP.)—The law took a girl "bridegroom" from her bride of a month and sent her to the Muncy Industrial Home for Women.

Only a brief hearing in Dauphin County Juvenile Court was required yesterday to end the marital life of Mildred (Effie) Erdman, 19, who posed as a boy, and Miss Margaret Zerby, 19, who married "him" in Portsmouth, Va., about a month ago.

Still attired in masculine clothes, "Effie" was sent to the home for violating a 1929 parole. Miss Zerby is being held until officers decide what to do with her.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira Erdman, of Elizabethville, the "bridegroom's" parents, and James Hornberger, also of Elizabethville, with whom the girls resided after their marriage, were permitted to return to their homes after the court hearing.

Sent to jail last week after neighbors, who had known "Effie" as a child had reported the "marriage" to probation officers, the girl protested jail officers' attempts to make her wear feminine attire. The neighbors told the court "Effie" had donned men's clothing a short time before she met Miss Zerby at a dance.

GRAFT CHARGE DENIED BY MARSHALL

Boyd or anyone else.

"Nobody in Pittsburgh can truthfully say that I ever received a penny I did not honestlyearn."

PARK'S PROGRAM

Other new developments in the Police Research Commission's probe into charges of police graft today included District Attorney Andrew T. Park's assertion that he would lay before a grand jury any evidence taken by the commission that warranted such action.

At the same time it was learned that "outside" personalities will not be brought into the Billy Scheible case by the commsion.

The commission will meet Saturday afternoon and discuss the future course of the investigation, which may switch to police budgets, pension fund solvency and politics in the police department.

A proposal that a committee of civic, social and industrial leaders be named to study vice conditions was made by Public Safety Director A. Marshall Bell in a letter to Mayor McNair today. The director proposes to seek advice from such a body on the best manner of vice suppression.

SURVEY FAVORED

The Mayor, commenting on the director's idea, said he thought it was "fine" and declared he would ask Bell to submit names of prospective committeemen to him and he himself would name the committee. Director Bell proposed that the committee consist of not less than five nor more than seven persons.

Mayor McNair declared he would leave the suggestion for a segregated vice district up to the Police Research Commission.

When asked if he favored such a district, the Mayor said:

"No, I am not very strong for it, but this commission might be. I wouldn't suggest it myself. I would want to put the question up to a commission of prominent people. I will say that if they favor such a district, they should let people run it who pay taxes."

With a twinkle in his eyes, the Mayor added:

"They've had the vice question ever since Adam ate the apple."

Director Bell expressed his willingness to prosecute any presently employed officer the police commissioner proves is linked with the underworld.

NO GRAND JURY PROBE

District Attorney Park will not call a grand jury to investigate charges of police corruption made before the Police Research Commission, he said today.

Neither will he attach the bank accounts of any of the former police officials mentioned, he added.

But, Park explained, if evidence of a criminal nature develops before the commission, he will present it before a grand jury, explaining:

"I have in the past attached bank accounts and they showed nothing.

"There will be no grand jury investigation into the Billy Scheible case. I could call witnesses and they wouldn't tell a thing. Those that appear before the commission are willing witnesses and will talk."

Park explained that any information developed by the research commission would be available, and if warranted, he would present it to a grand jury.

WAITS U. S. ACTION

He also stated that the Scheible case had been before him more than a year, and that he would take no action so long as the matter was in the hands of the government.

Mrs. Charlotte Ryan, of Wabash avenue, has testified she turned records and books of the House of Scheible, Fifth avenue, over to the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue, for a suit on income tax. She did so, she explained, because her son, Joseph, stayed at the house and she tried for years to get him away, but could get no aid from high police officials.

Mrs. Ryan had said the "take" at the Scheible house was $92,000 a year—and that the Scheible woman paid $1,000 a month for police protection.

It was learned that the commission considered the Scheible case virtually cosed—that it had served its purpose in exposing the connection of police with such places. Names listed on the records would not be revealed, it was learned.

COUNCIL MAY ACT

But it was expected that Council would act late this month on the resignation of Supt. of Police Ben R. Marshall.

The charge by James N. Hoey, a member of the commission, that former Detective Captain Boyd was collector for Supt. Marshall was believed to have brewed in Council a determination to blow him out of office.

Councilman John J. Kane, who sponsored the commission, asserted that the resignation of Marshall was not as yet before Council formally, and that no action had been taken on it.

Likewise, it was understood the police commission planned to ask the Economy League, now studying the pension fund of the city police, to advise whether the fund is insolvent, and $4,000,000 behind—a sum which the taxpayers might later have to pay.

If Marshall's resignation was held up, at the end of the year he could retire on a superintendent's pension.

Rumors were that complaints had been made about recent utilization of the police department for political purposes by personages now in official positions in the city, and that the Civil Service Commission would be asked to testify before the commission.

BELL'S PLEDGE

Director Bell, repeating that he desired the committee to furnish him with constructive material, asserted that he would prosecute any officer on duty under him if the commission would furnish names and supply charges.

He added:

"I have no authority over those who formerly served."

Asked whether he would accept Marshall's resignation, he replied:

"It's up to Council."

He expressed the hope that the commission would furnish him with names and the facts concerning the two detectives Hoey charged had bought suits of clothes with nickels and quarters, and added:

"If I had the names and the facts I could proceed."

Hoey had inferred that the city did not pay its men with silver.

Elmer D. Graper, Pitt professor and chairman of the commission, announced today that the commission's meeting Saturday would be private. He added:

"We're getting ready to go into records and the technical phases of the department."

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS -:- By PAUL MALLON

Foreign Speculators Behind Dollar's Recent Rise

WASHINGTON, July 11.—It is too hot to think about money, but apparently some people are thinking about it. Certain unreported subrosa shennanigans have been going on in foreign exchange.

For one thing the British have been secretly trying to bid the dollar up. For another, several of the largest European financial syndicates have been quietly transferring their accounts to America.

These two moves are behind the recent strength of the dollar. They have been noted by those in charge of the government exchange stabilization bureau, but by few others.

PURPOSE

The British probably are buying dollars for exchange advantage. They have also been shipping us gold. A million dollars' worth came in last week, most of it directly from England, and the rest from India and Jamaica. These transactions probably represent an influx of gold, as a commodity, to take advantage of our high price, rather than natural international exchange.

But there is only one explanation to the return of the syndicates to these shores. They are looking for profits.

The idea seems to be fairly general inside that they are coming in expecting widespread inflation talk, which will drive up the value of equities, and that they will flee again to some stable European currency before inflation comes.

However, no one can divine the motives of a speculator.

INFLATION

It is significant that nearly everyone worth being called a financier in this country believes (or says he believes) that the government will come to monetary inflation.

In fact, inflation is the first of the July crop of rumors. It started before President Roosevelt was a mile off shore. Such rumors have a way of reaching out all over the country without ever getting into print. This is especially true at a time when most government officials are absent, and no one of sufficient authority remains here to issue denials.

About this one particular rumor, certain things are clear. The first is that those in charge of our money policy do not intend to have any monetary inflation. No further dollar devaluation is planned. The silver policy is not being used in that way at all.

The only way for monetary inflation to come is for government spending to proceed so far that the Treasury cannot get spending money by borrowing it and, therefore, must start manufacturing it.

PROSPECTS

No one whose judgment is worth repeating, inside or outside the government, believes that the Treasury will need to manufacture money any time soon—within a year, at least.

There are those who raise their eyebrows at growing expenditures and predict that the end of the rope will be reached next summer. There are others who believe that the government has so much control over banks and money that it could double the existing public debt without insuperable difficulties. That is all a matter of opinion.

The inner administration circle, however, has a plan which it believes will avoid both possibilities. As soon as the Congressional elections are over in November, you are almost certain to see a rigid curtailment in expenditures. A moderate curtailment has already been effected. At the next session of Congress, also, you are likely to find a revision in taxes designed to increase revenue.

The New Dealers seem to be confident they can cut expenses and raise taxes to a point where they can balance a budget, eventually, at a figure around six billions. That would pull them out of the existing situation.

SOCIALISTS?

A young legal star called on an official of the Justice Department a few day ago looking for a job, and was asked what his political affiliations were. He replied:

"I haven't any."

"Well, what is your father?"

"A Republican."

"Oh, my, that's terrible. And whom did you vote for in the last election?"

"Norman Thomas."

The official threw up his hands in horror. He laughed.

"Young man, we may have been socialists a year ago, but we're past any more."

Many a true word is spoken in jest.

BUSINESS

The secret of that theory is not hard to find. It is business.

Government revenues cannot be raised unless business improves. You cannot tax blood out of a turnip. Neither can relief spending be cut down radically unless business improves sufficiently to lessen the demand for relief.

Therefore, all our chances, as regards inflation and spending, seem to lie with business prospects for the next year or two.

You can make your own guess about that.

POLICE BAD BOY GETS THE GATE

Patrolman Herman Stubenrauch, "the bad boy" of the police department, was given the "gate" today by the Police Trial Board.

It only remains for Public Safety Director A. Marshall Bell and Mayor McNair to approve the board's recommendation of dismissal for Stubenrauch to cinch his record as the most hired and fired guardian of the law in Pittsburgh.

His present predicament arose as a result of three informations made against him charging pointing of firearms, following a scrap with three Beechview men last month.

Director Bell made no comment except to announce the Trial Board's action today.

Stubenrauch was fired from the force in 1929, rehired, fired in 1930, rehired in 1931.

OUT IN THE MIDDLE WEST where wheat is raised, everybody knows that it takes good grain to make good flour.

And down where tobacco is raised the people who have grown up with tobacco know that it takes the right kind of leaf to make a good cigarette.

DOWN WHERE THEY GROW TOBACCO, in most places Chesterfield is the largest-selling cigarette. People know that because Chesterfields are made of the right kind of tobacco it is a milder cigarette, a cigarette that tastes better.

We state it as our honest belief that the tobaccos used in Chesterfields are of finer quality (and hence of better taste) than in any other cigarette at the price.

LIGHTNING BOLT KILLS MAN, TWO HURT

One man was dead today and another was nursing severe burns, victims of lightn which accompanied the storm that drenched the outlying districts of Pittsburgh late yesterday.

Fred Bartsch, Jr., 27, was killed when struck by lightning while standing under a tree in an apple orchard on his farm on White Run road, Shaler Township.

Bartsch, a florist and gardener and his employe, Samuel Bernard, 20, sought shelter under trees when the storm broke. Bartsch was standing under one and Bernard under another about 25 feet away. Bernard was stunned by the bolt that killed Bartsch. He ran to his employer and applied artificial respiration. Failing to revive the florist, Bernard summoned others, who hurried the victim to a physician's office in Millvale.

Bartsch, well known by floral dealers and produce merchants, was a son of the late Fred Bartsch, who was engaged in the floral and gardening business 37 years. He leaves his wife, Mrs. Margaret Bartsch, and an 8-month-old daughter, Alice; a brother, Theodore Bartsch, a partner in the business, and three sisters.

Edward Swakistak, 21, a Vang Construction Company employe, suffered burns when lightning struck a power shovel at Lock No. 2 in the Allegheny River.

His clothing in flames, Swakistak dashed 100 feet to the river and leaped in to save his life. Fellow workers rescued him and took him to St. Francis Hospital.

TORNADO WHIPS ILLINOIS TOWN

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., July 11.—(AP.)—A furious onslaught by the triple forces of hail, rain and a tornadic wind left Jacksonville strewn today with the litter of wrecked homes and garages, uprooted trees and a snarl of broken communication lines.

Sweeping down on the city and neighboring farms last night, the storm caused property damage unofficially estimated at $750,000 and injured a score of residents, three seriously.

The most seriously hurt were Edward Perry, Imlay City, Mich., an employe of the Sam B. Dill Circus, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hamilton, Jacksonville, injured when a tree fell on their automobile.

The circus was in town, and it was a lucky break that the night's show was over and the audience had poured out of the big tent a few moments before the blast came. The wind flattened the tent and sent a pole down on Perry, injuring him severely but not dangerously. Physicians said he would live. The circus was damaged to the extent of $40,000 or $50,000. A carnival also was wrecked.

BOAT ADRIFT, 3 MISSING

ERIE, July 11.—(AP.)—The overturned motorboat of two men and a boy believed drowned in stormy Lake Erie was recovered by Coast Guardsmen about a mile and a half east of here today.

The three, William Kaltschmidt, John W. Weber, father of eight, and Weber's 7-year-old son James, put out from Erie last night in a 12-foot craft on a projected fishing trip off Twelve-Mile Creek, east of here. The storm broke an hour later.

Fishing tackle and auxiliary oars were missing when the boat was recovered.

Possibility that a passing steamer had rescued the trio was discounted by Morris G. McCune, head of the Coast Guards.

GANG TARGET, 'BOSS' DIES

KANSAS CITY, July 11.—(AP.)—Machine guns, blazing from ambush, yesterday ended the career of John Lazia, 37, a gambler who rose to swift riches and political power in the Italian colony of Kansas City.

Interpreting the slaying in front of an apartment hotel as a fresh outbreak of gang warfare, police seized Joe Lusco, a political rival of Lazia on the city's North Side. Seventeen other men also were held for investigation. It was Lusco whose followers were arrested after the March city election disorders in which four men were slain.

Lazia, convicted recently of violating the federal income tax laws after a trial that focused attention upon the mysterious sources of his revenue, died nearly 12 hours after eight bullets penetrated his body.

Butter, Eggs, Cheese Stolen From Truck

The theft of butter, eggs and cheese valued at $1,000 from a truck owned by the Jersey Farm Products Company, 2101 Carson street, which was stolen and later abandoned, was being investigated by city detectives today. The truck was stolen while the driver was making a delivery at Diamond and Market streets, yesterday. It was found last night in River avenue at Chesbro street, but the butter, eggs and cheese were missing.

COURT LIFTS DIVORCE BAN

NORRISTOWN, Pa., July 11.—(AP.)—Judge George C. Corson today had dissolved the preliminary injunction which directed John Wanamaker, Jr., not to divorce Pauline Disston Wanamaker outside the state.

Mrs. Wanamaker asked the injunction originally, but her husband won a rehearing and later obtained a divorce in Reno and remarried. The court yesterday set aside the write when it was shown the order of the injunction was served on Wanamaker's butler and that Wanamaker, grandson of the late merchant, was only a "casual" resident of Pennsylvania.

SOLAR TORNADO SEEN IN GLASS

International News Service.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.—A "solar tornado," reduced in size from an object with a diameter of 12,000 miles to a spot as small as a matchhead by telescopic vision, today was being watched through the world's largest sun telescope by visitors to the Franklin Museum planetarium here.

The huge sunspot—a veritable whirlwind racing across the face of the sun—appeared to those peering through the sun telescope as an eighth-of-an-inch dot on a nine-inch picture of a pallid balloon.

The telescopic instrument is an 85-foot tube with a set of mirrors at the upper end and a mirror and ground glass screen at the lower end.

James Stokley, associate director of the museum, declared the coelostat or mirror arrangement at the upper end of the instrument enables the rest of the instrument to remain stationary and yet catch the sun's image continuously.

Pittsburgh Driver Crashes Near Toledo

Returning to Pittsburgh from a business trip to Detroit, James A. Fownes, 40, of 5825 Marlborough street, was injured yesterday near Toledo as his automobile crashed against a bridge abutment. The car plunged over the bridge. Fownes was taken to Eastside Hospital, Toledo. His wife and a sister, Mrs. Sara Fownes Wadsworth, have gone to Toledo to be at his bedside.

7 STEEL FIRMS NEAR WAGE PEACE

Despite the withdrawal of the Republic Steel Corporation from wage parleys with the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, other members of the Western Sheet and Tin Plate Manufacturers' Association expect to reach wage agreemnts with the union.

This was stated today by Elias Jenkins, secretary of the manufacturers' group, as the conference was resumed in the William Penn Hotel. He said:

"It is a foregone conclusion that the so-called convention scale of wages will not be accepted by the operators. The scales set by the workers at their conventions are always one-sided and are always toned down.

"That is what we are doing now. It will be several days, probably, before any definite announcement can be made as to results of the conference."

Jenkins said he knew nothing about the plans of Republic Steel which yesterday severed a 20-year-old connection with the Amalgamated. The steel company stated, according to the Associated Press:

"There is great danger that the management of the Amalgamated Association may pass into the hands of the radical element known as the 'rank and file leaders.'"

Eight companies had been represented in the manufacturers' group when they held a one-day meeting with the Amalgamated here 10 days ago. Withdrawal of the Republic from the group takes away approximately 18,000 of the 30,000 steel workers whose wages would be affected, it was said.

Yesterday's conference was marked by uncertainty on the part of the conference as a result of the Republic's action. Holding their meeting behind closed doors, the union men and the operators refused to make any comment.

After the meeting concluded, steel company representatives took reporters by the arms as they were talking with Jenkins, and hustled them unceremoniously from the room.

Jenkins stated that the association was purely a voluntary banding together by the companies and the Republic would not be bound in any way to the terms made by the other members.

TIGHE MAY QUIT AS UNION HEAD

have selected George Williams, president of the Canonsburg lodge of the Amalgamated, as the candidate for president most suitable to the members. Williams is in his forties, a roller in the Canonsburg mills, and was chairman of the committee of sixteen which favored acceptance of William Green's conciliation proposal over a threatened nationwide strike at the Amalgamated's recent convention.

L. A. Morris, of Canton, O., and Roy A. Kelsey, of Gary, Ind., are being considered as nominees for vice presidents; William J. Long, militant leader of the Weir-Cove lodge of the Amalgamated, will probably be nominated for secretary-treasurer, and Jack Byers, of Indiana Harbor, for managing editor of the Amalgamated Journal, it was learned.

FORBECK'S DENIAL

Earl J. Forbeck, of McKeesport, denied today that he will be a candidate for any of the international offices.

William J. Spang, of Duquesne, stormy petrel of the "rank and file" delegation to Washington last month, also declared today he will not be a candidate for any international office. He said:

"I didn't go to Washington to get Mike Tighe's job or any other job. I was driven there by the suffering and trouble of my men, and I intend to stand by here in Duquesne to see that the workers get what is rightfully theirs."

Nominations for new officers must be filed in the Amalgamated's office, 500 South Main street, West End, by July 15. Balloting will be by referendum in September.

Tighe, who even as a young man in the steel mills, had won a reputation for himself as a fighter, dislikes to retire when he feels there is a big fight to be won for the working men he had represented for so many years, it was learned.

It was considered probable he would announce he was surrendering his post to a younger man, as soon as new nominations are sent in.

Tighe has held offices in the Amaalgamated for the past 35 years. He was assistant secretary for 13 years; secretary-treasurer for 7 years and has been president for the past 15 years.

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.—(AP.)—The Gulf Refining Company, announcing its refinery in Southwest Philadelphia will be reopened soon, today told striking employes to return to work or their places will be filled.

STRIKES' TREND DOWN IN STATE

HARRISBURG, July 11.—(AP.)—Labor disputes in Pennsylvania in May involved 16,169 workmen, the Department of Labor and Industry finds, as compared with 23,866 workmen involved in April disputes.

Further improvement was noted in 36 cases of labor trouble cleared up in May, including two in the textile trades—one at Marcus Hook, involving 7,000 employes, and another embracing 5,000 knit goods workers in Philadelphia.

Anthracite strike, with 4,300 workers involved, accounted for more than a quarter of the May trouble.

ALUMINUM CO. VERDICT FAILS TO VOID CODE

WASHINGTON, July 11.—(AP.)—Charges of monopoly against the Aluminum Company of America and a demand for suspension of the aluminum code, which became operative today, are being ignored by Hugh S. Johnson. The recovery administrator told reporters:

"I don't think the code creates monopoly."

Independent aluminum interests demanded suspension of the code following a decision by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New York reversing a verdict of acquittal in the $5,000,000 damage suit brought by the Baush Machine Tool Company, of Springfield, Mass., against the Aluminum Company of America—a Mellon-controlled concern. The Baush company is a member of the independent group.

In approving the aluminum code for a 90-day trial period, Johnson said he would order an investigation to determine "the extent to which the code has operated to protect small enterprises from any alleged oppression and discrimination."

It was disclosed that the Justice Department is actively pursuing its investigation of monopolistic charges against the Aluminum Company of America and that the NRA inquiry would not cause it to halt the work that has been under way for months.

The company itself has welcomed the NRA investigation. Roy A. Hunt, president, said:

"We are glad Gen. Johnson invited investigation since it gives us opportunity to publicly defend ourselves against unfair attacks such as have repeatedly been made against us. During the past 10 years the Aluminum Company has been subjected to more investigations than probably any company in America."

The formal organization meeting of the aluminum code authority will take place in New York tomorrow. The aluminum independents demanded yesterday that Johnson order a postponement of that meeting.

The independents charge the Aluminum company has a monopoly on virgin ingot production. The code forbids it from selling aluminum ingot to its subsidiaries at prices less than paid by independent fabricators of aluminum products. However, the independents assert that code does not prohibit the company from charging uniformly high prices, enabling them to use this profit in offsetting losses incurred by underselling fabricated aluminum.

Aluminum Company Faces New Suit

JACKSON, Mich., July 11.—(INS.)—Counsel for the Sheet Aluminum Corporation of Jackson today announced it was planning a suit for $3,000,000 against the Aluminum Corporation of America.

The announcement was made after Jackson officials learned that a District Court of Appeals in New York had ordered back for trial a similar suit started by the Baush Tool and Machine Company, of Springfield, Mass.

The suit will charge that the Mellon-controlled Aluminum Corporation dictates the price of raw aluminum and then sells fabricated aluminum at a low price, making competition unfair. Relief under the NRA has failed completely, Attorney L. S. Bisbee said, although the aluminum code has not been difinitely settled.

BULLETS FLY IN STRIKE

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 11.—(AP.)—Two shots were fired, 11 men were arrested and two others were injured in strike disorders today at the Wehr Steel Casting Company plant in suburban West Allis.

Both bullets, said by the police to have been fired by a Negro woman, went wild, but the crew of more than 50 pickets became infuriated and tipped over two automobiles in which workers were attempting to enter the plant.

Policeman Howard Todd suffered injuries to his feet when a car ran over him and Joseph Balczerak an injury to his hand during the melee.

NRA TO PLACE 450 INDUSTRIES IN ONE CODE

WASHINGTON, July 11.—(AP.)—One big code for 450 small industries is expected to emerge from NRA's hopper momentarily.

This code, carrying the recovery unit another long stride on the road to simplification, will touch only such basic standards as wages, hours and prohibition of child labor. It will not contain price fixing.

Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, who disclosed yesterday that he wants to turn his NRA job over to a commission and step back into private life as soon as the President feels he can spare him, hoped to promulgate the new code before leaving today on a combination vacation-speaking tour westward.

His office sent out word that President Roosevelt had wirelessed Johnson telling him to speak as often as he wished and wherever he desired.

This was considered an answer to published reports that President Roosevelt had curtailed the speaking tour in which Johnson is expected to expound the NRA. The tour originally was reported to number 15 addresses.

Leaving by plane today, he planned to speak tomorrow at Waterloo, Ia., at Portland, Ore., on July 15, then go to the University of California to receive an honorary Phi Beta Kappa key about July 19.

After an address at Los Angeles July 20, he expects to take a two-weeks' vacation in the Sierra or Rocky Mountains, then speak at Chicago on his return trip to the capital.

Living Cost Up For Low-Paid Workers

WASHINGTON, July 11.—(AP.)—The Labor Department reported today the cost of items for families of wage earners and lower salaried workers increased 1 per cent during the six months ended July 1.

Food increased 2.7 per cent, clothing 2.1 per cent and house furnishing goods 1.8 per cent. Rent dropped 1.7 per cent and light 2.1 per cent.

The survey covered 33 cities scattered throughout the country. The cost of living dropped in only four. They were Chicago, New Orleans, Mobile and Los Angeles.

DRYS WIN 2 TO 1 IN MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, Miss., July 11.—(AP.)—Mississippi held its place among the dry states today by a vote of approximately 2 to 1.

Incomplete, unofficial returns from yesterday's prohibition referendum showed defeat of the hard liquor bill by a vote of 47,275 to 25,246 in 658 of the 1,596 precincts of the state.

By voting dry the people rebuked their Legislature. The last Legislature authorized beer at the same time it put the liquor issue before the voters and 4 per cent beer was just as far as Mississippians chose to go in the legalization of alcoholic beverages.

The victory of the drys in retaining their 25-year-old prohibition law barring hard liquors was hailed as a signal triumph for the prohibition forces of which Gov. Bennett Conner is a leader. The Governor signed the bill for submission of the issue to the people and then campaigned actively for dry votes.

ICKES DEFENDS OIL CODE

International News Service.

WASHINGTON, July 11.—The oil code has placed 100,000 previously unemployed workers back to work, Secretary of Interior Ickes, as oil administrator, said today, the first anniversary of the code, while the industry's yearly payroll has increased by approximately $150,000,000, Ickes added.

"Gasoline prices at retail have been slightly increased by the code, averaging from a half to one cent a gallon. The Federal Trade Commission reported the increase represents approximately $160,000,000 a year. We have been criticized and unfairly so, because of this increase."

Ickes declared conditions in the industry prior to the code were approaching chaos. He continued:

"One of our major accomplishments has been the preservation of the thousands of stripper wells scattered through Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, as well as those in the flush producing states of Texas, Oklahoma and California."

Hearing Date Fixed In Box Plant Strike

Judge Samuel H. Gardner has fixed July 18 as the date for hearing testimony on the application of the Keystone Box Company for an injunction against striking employes to prevent them from interfering with the company's business. The proceeding is directed against Local Union 249 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers of America, whose members are on strike at the plant of the plaintiff at Twenty-eighth and Smallman streets.

LABOR BOARDS' PARLEY CALLED

WASHINGTON, July 11.—(AP.)—The National Labor Relations Board has summoned the heads of its 20 regional labor boards to the capital for conferences on policies and procedures in handling labor disputes.

This was disclosed by Lloyd Garrison, chairman of the relations board, which stepped into office Monday to replace the old National Labor Board headed by Senator Wagner, of New York.

Garrison requested the chairmen of the 20 regional agencies set up by the old board to come as soon as possible. He expects them to be here for conferences over the week-end.

The new board got down to actual work yesterday on the docket of around 100 labor trouble cases it inherited from its predecessor. Garrison said it had to be determined which cases would be dealt with first, and also to settle the relationship of the new agency with other federal labor units.

Save U. S. Aircraft Insignias to Use in Constructing Scale or Replica Models of Famous Government Planes!

By J. JAMES MOORE

Pittsburgh Wing Commander.

In today's column I am publishing the twelfth in our series of official insignias to be found on Uncle Sam's aircraft. This series, which will include about 100 in all, is one of the most interesting features that the aircraft division of this country have to offer us.

Many of the drawings were made by expert artists from the ranks of the Army and Navy air units, while others, as you can well guess from looking at them, were planned and executed by amateurs.

Many of the insignias are unique, some funny, others hideous and a number of them truly artistic. They make a very fine set for your scrap book and no doubt most of you members are clipping them out each time they appear.

They will come in handy when you construct scale or replica models of these famous government planes, for you will then be able to draw a replica of the real insignia which you will have on hand.

And remember, we are going to have a scrap book contest at a latter date. Many of the girl members of the Junior Birdmen should take first prizes in that.

Hundreds of letters have been received at my office from members thanking the Junior Birdmen for presenting this interesting series. Just keep your eyes peeled on the column. We have some dandy illustration series to present to you before long.

ARMY INSIGNIA NO. 12

The insignia of the 18th pursuit squadron of the U. S. Army Air Corps, located at Schofield Barracks.

New York Boy Sets Model Plane Record

Here is a bit of news that should interest you plane builders.

Herbert Greenburg, 17-year-old member of the New York American wing of the Junior Birdmen, established a new world record for indoor duration flying with his microfilm indoor tractor at Akron, O., last week.

He succeeded in keeping his miniature model in the air for 18 minutes 4 and 6-10 seconds, thus winning the popular William B. Stout trophy, a much coveted award.

In addition, this young birdman, who lives in Newark, N. J., wearing his red, white and blue wings of our organization and carrying his membership card bearing No. 1009, flew two other planes in the meet to victory.

He won second place in the indoor fuselage event and third place in the outdoor stick contest. The indoor meet was held in the Goodyear Zeppelin hangar and the outdoor events at the Akron field.

We are counting on Joe Isuro, Pittsburgh's champ at building flying models, to carry off some of the big prizes in the National Junior Birdmen contest July 28 at Fort Meyer Field, Va.

Joe, who won our wing meet Sunday at South Park, is now building some new planes for the national derby. He will take to the national meet about seven or eight planes. He will use the ships which he thinks are most suitable to the weather conditions at the time.

I will tell you more about Joe later. Perhaps we may even have him write one of the birdmen columns and let him tell you how he builds his championship models. How would you like that?

Also I believe that we should have Clement Turansky, winner in the glider event Sunday, tell you how to build your own glider. Watch for their stories.

Indoor and Outdoor Meetings to Be Held

Here is some more great news.

The local wing is planning a huge indoor meeting in about two weeks. The boys who placed at the birdmen meet will be awarded with their medals at that time. Besides, Joe Isuro will be given his trophy and a rousing sendoff to Washington.

Several noted fliers will be at the meeting to talk to you. I'll tell you their names later.

Then on August 15, still a tentative date, we are planning an outdoor gathering of every member. Both of these events will be worth attending. Watch this column for details!

HAPPY LANDINGS!

Builders' Exchange To Picnic Tomorrow

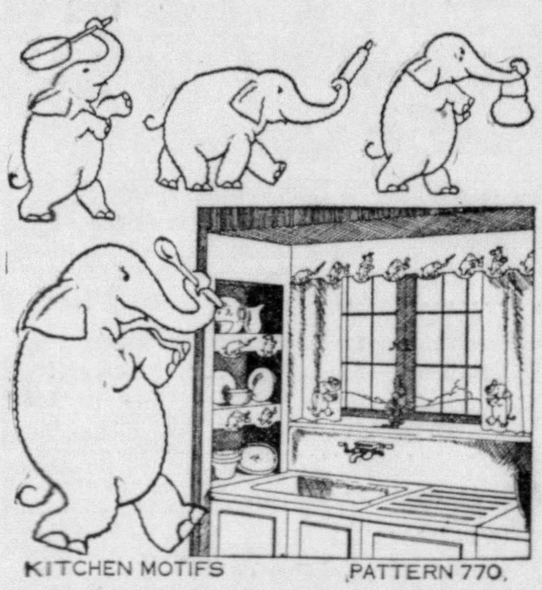
LAURA WHEELER DESIGNS



KITCHEN MOTIFS — PATTERN 770.

Somehow the smart kitchen today not only flaunts itself in gay colors but also likes decorations that are droll. These elephants—they'd look well done in any color or in a variety of colors—are just the thing to use, for they are always decorative and certainly are droll. They really belong to the same family as the elephant towels 740, shown some time ago, and so would make a fitting kitchen ensemble with them. The larger ones are the thing to add a touch of decoration to curtains, kitchen bags and larger accessories, while the smaller ones are cute on shelving and potholders, among other things. The embroidery is done entirely in outline stitch. The edge of the shelving is given in a pattern so that as much of it can be made as desired, spacing the elephants as you please.

Pattern 770 comes to you with a transfer pattern of two and two reverse elephants 3¾x6 inches, four and four reverse elephants ranging from 2x3½ inches to 2½x4 inches and the edge of the shelving; yardage requirements for a variety of articles, and illustrations of stitches.

Send 10 cents in stamps or coin (coin preferred) for this pattern to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph Needlecraft Department, 82 Eighth avenue, New York, N. Y.

PINCHOT WARNS PITT IN FIRING OF TURNER

an explanation which accounts for the reappointment on May 9 as well as the dismissal on June 30.

"I feel that Dr. Bowman's raising of the religious issue is now only a deliberate attempt to divert the public mind from the fact that, as he said to me, it was discontent among a group of business men which caused my dismissal."

BOWMAN'S STATEMENT

Dr. Bowman's statement follows:

"It seemed a matter of ordinary kindness to Dr. Turner, at the beginning of this incident, to make no statement except this:

"'We believe that the purpose of the university can be better fulfilled with another man in his place.'

"I should be sorry now to cause Dr. Turner any unnecessary hurt.

"The right explanation is not simple. The university deals with facts and with the meaning of facts as they may illuminate a path toward a happy, useful and good life. The material of the university is boys and girls. They come, many of them vague in purpose, but generally with fine earnestness.

TEACHER'S RESPONSIBILITY

"For them the world is new. Days are all days of discovery. Just around the corner is fresh and wider vision. Surprised by what seems an escape from all that is ordinary, they want to be fair and open-minded. They are quick about taking up new ideas.

"Now the point of this is that a teacher, if he even half realizes his responsibility to these impressionable students, will feel himself exceedingly humble before God.

"Let me say a little more about this. A teacher, besides being a scholar, should have in [illegible] something of the ancient [illegible] His highest happiness is [illegible]e and to make others see [illegible]deal of intelligence, of fitness and of spirituality. This means, obviously, that he will not be sarcastic or flippant toward religion or sneer at a student's faith. Catholics, Jews and Protestants, in the presence of such a teacher, will each feel an overflowing of reverence for their respective faiths.

"Briefly, I have stated here one of the policies of the university. It is this policy which, in our judgment, Dr. Turner did not adequately fulfill. His failure is not concerned at all with the New Deal. It is concerned with an attitude toward faith and toward spiritual growth.

"To be more specific, let me quote part of a letter written to me recently by a local minister:

"'In particular, he (Turner) has ridiculed students who have been faithful in attending Sabbath school, greeting them as they entered the class room with a sneering remark, "Here comes our Sunday school boy."

"'At frequent conferences of ministers, we have discussed together the attitude which Mr. Turner has maintained toward religion and have felt that to permit him to continue his methods would be almost criminal. So persistently has his policy of instruction been carried forward, that quite frequently the term "Turnerism" has been developed as expressive of the worst approach to religion. I realize, of course, that certain religious adjustments are necessary when boys come to college, but those adjustments should be undertaken by one who is in thorough sympathy with religious ideals and who is aware that permanent harm may be done by unwise handling of what we all recognize is a most difficult problem.'"

TURNER'S REPLY

Dr. Turner's reply to the Chancellor's charge follows:

"In reply to the letter of Hon. Henry Ellenbogen, Chancellor John G. Bowman declares that the real reason for my dismissal is an attitude of hostility toward religion which I have consistently expressed from year to year. This belated explanation seems to me only to add to the confusion which clusters about the actual reason, whatever it is, for my dismissal.

"Dr. Bowman did not mention this reason to me when I asked for a formal explanation. Nor was such a criticism of me raised last summer when my reappointment was held up for a month after the regular appointments were made. Furthermore, certainly such an attitude on my part, if a sufficient reason for my dismissal on June 30, was also a sufficient reason on May 9 when I was reappointed.

"I feel that I am entitled to an explanation which accounts for the reappointment on May 9 as well as the dismissal on June 30. And finally, I wish to deny that I ever used such terms, as attributed to me by Dr. Bowman, about my students either inside or outside of the classroom, and also to deny that I have ever expressed hostility to religion as such.

"I have treated religion as an historical development which in one form has justified certain social procedures and in other forms has justified other social procedures. And I have only asked that students make their own decisions on such differences of view. If this sort of criticism was the cause of my dismissal, I feel that it ought to have been mentioned to me when I asked for a formal explanation. I am not impressed by that sort of kindness which refuses to give the truth when the truth is asked for.

"I feel that Dr. Bowman's raising of the religious issue is now only a deliberate attempt to divert the public mind from the fact that, as he said to me, it was discontent among a group of businessmen which caused my dismissal. And this group of businessmen is openly known to have opposed the passage of that social legislation which I actively supported. My reappointment from year to year was never held up until I became associated with the Pennsylvania Security League."

DEFENDS INSTRUCTOR

H. L. Woodmansee, president of Pittsburgh Typographical Union No. 7, came to the defense of the Pitt instructor today in a statement which follows:

"My attention has been called to the fact that Prof. Ralph E. Turner has been dismissed by the University of Pittsburgh, allegedly because he has expressed opinions and thoughts that are termed liberal and progressive. It is unthinkable that an institution of higher education, dependent for the most part upon money obtained from the citizens of the state of Pennsylvania through taxes, many of these citizens being workingmen and working women, should thus attempt to coerce and blackjack free thought and free speech. Should the alleged reasons for the dismissal of Prof. Turner be established by facts, undoubtedly every labor organization and every union worker will vigorously protest his dismissal."

TEXT OF PINCHOT'S BLAST AT BOWMAN

HARRISBURG, July 11.

The text of Gov. Pinchot's letter to Chancellor John G. Bowman threatening a legislative investigation of the dismissal of Dr. Ralph E. Turner at the University of Pittsburgh, follows:

The dismissal of Dr. Ralph E. Turner from the faculty of the University of Pittsburgh is a matter in which I am concerned both as Governor of the commonwealth and as a trustee of the university. Dr. Turner's dismissal is one of a series of similar actions taken by the university under your direction, which indicate that its purposes as an institution of higher learning have been perverted to conform to the views of a small group of wealthy and powerful men.

Every fact in the case of Dr. Turner that has come to my attention goes to show that the actual reason for dismissing him was that his participation in efforts to secure liberal social and labor legislation was displeasing to these men—in other words, that the academic freedom of the university is being sacrificed at the dictation of men of great wealth.

CHARGES OTHER CASES

Liberal causes have heretofore been suppressed and independent thinkers have been discouraged so frequently at the University of Pittsburgh as to make it appear that this is the settled policy of the university under your administration. Doctor Turner's dismissal now confirms that view.

Doctor Turner's record as a teacher and a scholar is excellent. His work at the university has been an important factor in maintaining high standards of learning. His students, his colleagues and you yourself, I am told, have had nothing but praise for his work as a teacher and his conduct as a faculty member. You are said to have described him as one of the 10 best teachers under your direction.

As recently as May 9 of this year Doctor Turner's contract as a member of the faculty was renewed, which is the best of proof that there was at that time no reason for removing him.

CITES PUBLIC SUPPORT

The taxpayers of Pennsylvania contribute every year large sums to the support of the University of Pittsburgh. It is my clear duty to point out to you that academic freedom is a necessary condition for obtaining state aid, and that the suppression of academic freedom cannot be tolerated in a state-aided institution of higher learning.

If the University of Pittsburgh is to teach only facts and ideas that are acceptable to the over-rich, then it might well be supported by the over-rich, but not by public funds. Moreover, if the University of Pittsburgh denies not only to Doctor Turner but to other members of its teaching staff the constitutional liberties which are the right of every American it must take the consequences.

By becoming a professor in the University of Pittsburgh an American citizen does not lose any of his rights either as an American or as a Pennsylvanian. The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania declares:

"The free communication of thoughts and opinions is one of the invaluable rights of man and every citizen may freely speak, write and print on any subject, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty."

It cannot be taken for granted that the commonwealth will continue to support any institution which denies by its action the principles upon which the commonwealth is founded.

RAPS 'MELLONS'

The University of Pittsburgh appears in fact to have curtailed the academic freedom which gave the university its reason for existence and its right to state aid. If the Mellons want a school to teach their ideas, then let them support it. The commonwealth cannot.

It is not my place as Governor of Pennsylvania to interfere with the teaching policy of any university or other institution of higher learning in Pennsylvania. So long as any institution continues to guide itself by the broad principles of truth and free speech, no one has any right to interfere with it.

But when the University of Pittsburgh, or any other university, denies to any members of its staff the constitutional liberties which I as Governor have taken an oath to defend, and when the very fundamentals upon which any university must base its claim for public recognition are undermined by such action as yours in dismissing Doctor Turner, then it my clear duty to protest.

If the facts are as I understand them, I shall have no choice but lay them before the next regular session of the General Assembly and recommend a thorough investigation of Doctor Turner's case and of the history of academic freedom at the University of Pittsburgh, for the purpose of determining whether the university should continue to receive public funds.

DOOMED WOMAN HAPPY AT STAY

ALBANY, N. Y., July 11.—(AP)—The Court of Appeals, which once passed judgment upon Mrs. Anna Antonio, young Albany mother condemned to death, meets next Monday again to consider her fate.

Yesterday, for the third time, Gov. Lehman delayed the execution of the convicted husband slayer and her two accused accomplices. He granted a stay until August 9 to permit a state's court of last resort to pass upon a petition for a new trial.

"Thank God, my prayers have been answered," cried the 28-year-old mother of three when told by Mrs. Lewis E. Lawes, wife of Sing Sing's warden, that executive clemency had been granted. The first reprieve on June 28 came only a few minutes before the death march was to begin. Vincent Saetta, one of the accomplices, exonerated Mrs. Antonio of a part in the killing of her husband.

of all denominations, Catholic, Protestant, Jewish, are attended in their last moments, and at public expense, by a priest, clergyman or rabbi, as the case may be.

Any man, whatever his religion, Mohammedan, Taoist, Buddhist, no matter what, would be allowed here to receive religious consolation at the last moment, even though he had committed the worst crime, and at public cost, although the big prisons retain chaplains of the three dominating religions only, because their followers, so much the more numerous, commit by far the greatest number of murders.

THE SMITHSONIAN Institution is translating an interesting "diary," a notebook taken from some murdered frontier soldier. Four Indians in turn owned the diary and "wrote in it," in pictures, each having killed and scalped the owner that preceded him.

In this diary are pictures showing various Indian owners, including "Yellow Horse," "Little Bear," and "Howling Wolf." All pictures in the Indians' diary show how they killed and scalped other Indians or white men.

But it is not for white men to sneer. If you wrote the diary of many of our "best minds," you would have nothing to report except the collecting of money. The difference between collecting scalps and collecting money is not great, only the difference between white and red men, and, sometimes, scalp collecting is the less cruel amusement.

VET TO RECEIVE WAR CROSS

It was in the second battle of the Marne, on the Janvier farm, in France, July 15, 1918, that a wounded sergeant directed an ammunition train, disregarding the pleading of his men to be allowed to take him to a hospital.

Tomorrow night, at Cribbs Athletic Field in Verona, Hugh Abercrombie, 38, will be honored in the presence of his family, friends and former "buddies" when the Distinguished Service Cross will be pinned on him. The presentation will be made by Capt. Ross Warren.

The citation reads that Abercrombie directed an ammunition train after being wounded, and that his disregard of his own condition was an inspiration to his companions.

Abercrombie, who lives with his wife and three children at 541 North avenue, Verona, is an electrician employed by the Duquesne Light Company at Colfax.

Presentation services will be in charge of the Kletzley-Egli Post No. 441, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Verona. The American Legion Band of Oakmont will furnish the music.

SPY 'DILLINGER' AT GRAVEYARD

HAWTHORNE, N. Y., July 11.—(AP)—Near the Sleepy Hollow Cemetery where Washington Irving's famous fictional character, Ichabod Crane, once saw a headless horseman, a resident of New York state last night reported he saw a man with a machine gun who "resembled John Dillinger."

The man, whose name was not obtained by the state police, telephoned Company K, with headquarters in Hawthorne, that he saw the man with eight other "suspicious" characters with two parked automobiles.

An immediate report was sent out over the five-state police printer asking all authorities to watch for the men, who when seen by the informant were reported to be changing license plates on their automobiles.

Several weeks ago the five-state circuit, going to Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, Pennsylvania and New York authorities, carried a report Dillinger had been seen in Western Massachusetts.

VATICAN BACKS NEWS WRITERS

International News Service.

ROME, July 11.—Accusations of Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, German propaganda minister, that foreign correspondents had distorted facts about the recent bloody revolt in the Reich, were challenged today by the Osservatore Romano, official organ of the Vatican. The newspaper said:

"Goebbels would have done better to have explained what the facts were. Also he was ill advised in praising the equanimity of the German press, where everybody is aware rubbish was printed regarding Dollfuss and the Austrian situation."

Plain intimation that the Vatican expected Chancellor Hitler to provide the explanation Goebbels did not make of recent events in Germany was contained in the comment:

"Since it is announced that Hitler's speech in the Reichstag is imminent, we expect 'Der Fuehrer' to give some explanation of the events of June 30."

BAER'S LIFE, LOVES

Bill Brown Tiff Is Described By Maxie

CHAPTER XXI

Mike Cantwell, my trainer, always was with me, and plenty of times Ancil had a skeptical look on his face when Mike told him I had done six, eight or 10 miles. Ancil thought I had Mike buffaloed. The truth is, Mike had me buffaloed. It's just as well for me that I was willing to do six, eight or 10 miles on the road, because, if I hadn't, Mike would have beaten hell out of me and he—not I—would have been the fellow who would have gone in against Carnera.

Mike is as fine a fellow as lives—until you try to cross him up. In that case, I'd rather fight 10 Carneras. But he didn't have to drive me—not at Asbury. That's one time I drove myself. I did it, day after day, until I was in such condition—from roadwork—that I knew I only needed to climb into the same ring to win the world championship from Carnera.

Bill Brown Episode

Just because Bill Brown, one of the New York Boxing Commissioners, expected me to wreck my sparring partners to prove I was in fit condition I almost lost the chance to become heavyweight champion of the world. Or maybe I should say it was all because Bill has grown so dignified that he can't understand highjinks.

Brown visited my camp a week before I met Carnera, and got his name and pictures in many papers by saying that I was in horrible physical condition, that I was a bum, and that unless my mixup with Carnera was called off the public would be bunked, paying big money to see the big Italian bat me out in a round or so.

The afternoon Brown arrived I was tipped off that he was a very fussy old fellow and that he had practically ordered that I do my best. If I had done my best I would have knocked out every sparring partner I had—maybe sent the whole gang to the hospital. So I said:

"Who the hell is this guy Brown to tell me how I'm to do my training? I'll do as I please and that will have to satisfy the whole Brown family."

I did as I pleased and Brown nearly had apoplexy.

Maxie's Viewpoint

I am called "a butcher," but no one ever heard of me slaughtering sparring partners. They are my buddies, and I'm not out to get a reputation by wrecking them. They either are young fellows, like myself, who have ambition, but, unlike myself, haven't had the opportunity, or oldtimers trying to earn a few dollars with what skill they have left.

Sometimes I've nailed the boys a little harder than I intended, but I never tried to finish them. I suppose it would have pleased Brown for me to knock them through the ropes, but that's not my system, Brown or no Brown. I get my heavy punching practice on the big bag—not on the chins or the bodies of my sparring partner pals.

In boxing, I put on my regular show for Brown. He didn't like my clowning. He must have chewed his palate when I let the boys get some cheers for themselves by allowing them to poke me around the ring. I'm supposed to be a spotlight hound. Okay. But I don't try to grab it by hurting my sparring partners.

I'll always feel that Brown let loose the blast about my being "unfit" not so much because he really thought I was out of shape physically, but because I ruffled his tail feathers with a workout according to my own ideas—not his.

Calls It a Mistake

Brown ordered that I do my best. My best would have meant beating my sparrers into unconsciousness. No man lives who can order me to "butcher" my sparring partners. I do my fighting against real opponents. And, if they aren't too tough, I don't even try to "butcher" them.

We all make mistakes. Brown made his at Asbury Park and repeated it in New York. He's an all right fellow. But he'd be a still better one if he stepped out and admitted what the whole world now knows—that I was in shape o step 50 rounds, not merely 15, on June 14.

WELL-DRESSED MAX BAER

HANGS HIMSELF IN CELL

His broken belt tied around his neck, the lifeless body of Jacob Frank, 60, of 14 McRae street, Duquesne, was found on the floor of his cell in the Duquesne Police Station this morning.

He had hanged himself, police said.

Mrs. Joseph Cukel, a friend of his family, who are in Cleveland, found Frank lying on the floor of his cell when she took him his breakfast.

Frank was arrested Monday on a charge of operating a still and was being held for United States Internal Revenue officers.

The weight of his body apparently had broken the improvised noose by which he had hanged himself from a hook on the cell wall.

MUSIC

LAWN CONCERT

Hotel Schenley

Favorable weather again permitted a pleasant out-of-doors concert at Hotel Schenley lawn last night. Acoustics seem to be adjusted now that the orchestra is likely at its best.

Mr. Lissfelt

Director Saudek arranged an ambitious program including Wagner's "Rienzi" Overture and the "Tannhaeuser March." Lighter music brought the tuneful "Sari" excerpts and the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana."

A fine touch came with the Ukrainian Folk Dancers who did a Kozak, Zaporgian Knights' Dance, Kozaczok and Tchumak, with solos by the diminutive Mary Bonchak and Johnny Chrusz. The dances were stirring and the response was so excellent that we hope we may watch these dancers again under the same conditions.

Friday night's concert will introduce the Orpheus Choir and Gertrude Blenko as soloists, and there will be a Sunday night concert this week with Sarah Core, soprano, singing music from "Lohengrin."

Many Film Workers Women

By JIMMY STARR

HOLLYWOOD, July 11.—Hello! The hand which used to rock the cradle . . . exclusively . . . is now playing an all-important part in the art industry of motion pictures. Interesting, indeed, is a survey to ascertain how far the penetration of "feminine influence" has gone into the world's film studios.

Fifteen years ago picture plants were predominantly masculine. Today they are as much as 40 per cent feminine. Of the 117 trades, professions, vocations and advocations needed to make a modern photoplay, women are to be found in all save a dozen.

There is a woman at M-G-M who does nothing but tell stories to producers. She is considered the world's best yarn spinner. Her name is Kate Corbaley.

The heads of most studio research departments are women. It is the feminine sense of order that places women in charge of the vast story files.

And, of course, women and girls make the best stenographers. Sometimes as many as 100 typists are employed in one studio.

In the beginning film cutting was exclusively masculine, but now there are three ladies in the game—Blanche Sewell, Margaret Boothe and Frances Marsh—who have gained fame and are considered as fine in their art as any man.

Most photographic retouchers are now women, while one of the best portrait photographers in the business is a woman. And again the feminine sense of order is entrusted to the inspection of some 80 million feet of film that annually leaves one huge film plant.

So, you see, women are playing important parts "behind the camera lines" of Hollywood.

Kinema knick-knacks—Carole Lombard's first movie on her new Paramount ticket will be "Soldier Woman," a highly dramatic thing. Fashion note—Ginger Rogers has gone in for black linen, achieving a startling effect by wearing crocheted gloves in bright apple green . . . Universal is thinking of starring Henry Hull, whose Broadway performance in "Tobacco Road" is even the talk of Hollywood, in "Robinson Crusoe"—but of course, Mr. Hull has something to say about his roles. He may not like the idea.

Odds and ends—Marion Davies' new film, "Operator 13," broke all records at the local Loew's State Theater over Fourth of July week . . . Charlotte Henry, who rose to fame with the title role of "Alice in Wonderland," seems to be stuck in the fantasy-type of cinema. Her latest role is with Laurel and Hardy in "Babes in Toyland" . . . Bob Benchley is in our midst and is checking in at M-G-M.

"In a Pig's Eye" is the new Clark and McCullough comedy for RKO.

Seek Society Debs For Musicale

Society debutantes are again wanted by the movies, this time as chorus girls! They are to dance with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in RKO current musical, "The Gay Divorce." The call was issued by Mark Sandrich, director, and Dave Gould, dance director, who will conduct the interviews and tryouts. Beauty, charm, culture, grace and dancing talent are the requirements.

Young Gets Lead In Thriller

Robert Young will have the male lead in "Death on the Diamond," adaptation of Cortland Fitzsimmons' baseball mystery novel, production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. The cast includes Madge Evans, Ted Healy, Edward Brophy and C. Henry Gordon, with Edward Sedgwick directing.

New Charley Chan Film to Start

The next Warner Oland "Chan" characterization which starts filming next week will be called "Charlie Chan in London."

JUDGE MUSMANNO WRITES MUNI MOVIE

Judge M. A. Musmanno, the Pittsburgh jurist, has turned screen writer!

The Judge is co-author with Harry R. Irving of "Black Hell," the next picture in which the Warners will star that fine character actor, Paul Muni. This talkie will be based on two stories, "Jan Volkanik," by Judge Musmanno, and "Bohunk," by Mr. Irving, and the screen treatment is now being prepared by Abem Finkel and Isaac Goldberg.

The theme of "Black Hell" is the life of a coal miner, and Muni, himself, is collaborating with Finkel and Goldberg in the adaptation. The role is expected to give Muni a part similar to his memorable characterization in "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," and there is a possibility that some of the exterior scenes will be made in the coal mining districts of Western Pennsylvania.

In emerging as an author of a screen drama with such a plot basis, Judge Musmanno enters a field long considered a fertile subject by the grimmest of all the playwrights, Eugene O'Neill. The scowling O'Neill has often delved into the possibility of a tragedy laid in the coal mining regions, and there was talk at one time that he had started a manuscript carrying such a plot.

In making his debut as a screen writer, Judge Musmanno is fortunate in having the gifted Muni cast in the leading role of the story of which he is part author.

GOLDWYN'S BAD MEMORY

In the current issue of a movie fan magazine, Samuel Goldwyn, the screen producer, lists what he terms "the 12 greatest film stars of all time." Here they are in the order in which Goldwyn set them down:

Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Norma Shearer, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Janet Gaynor, Greta Garbo, Clara Bow, Wallace Reid, Will Rogers, Wallace Beery and Eddie Cantor. Mr. Goldwyn also said that he was "tempted to name Anna Sten," although on what grounds I haven't the slightest idea.

For some reason or another, he didn't say, Mr. Goldwyn forgot such historical personages of the motion picture firmament as Marie Dressler and Lon Chaney. If you can think of two more stellar names in the film hall of fame than those two I would like to know who they are.

It also seems to me, their former box office value considered, that perhaps Rudolph Valentino, Lillian Gish, Tom Mix, or even Francis X. Bushman, could have substituted for such names as Clara Bow, Eddie Cantor or Norma Shearer. And just how Richard Barthelmess, a stalwart for years of both the silent and sound screen, could be omitted, only Mr. Goldwyn knows, and he didn't say anything about it.

Dressler and Chaney. Probably the outstanding names of all, with the sole exception of Chaplin.

WHISPERING GALLERY

Chester Hale is now claiming the distinction of being "the man behind the fan dance" as executed by Sally Rand . . . But the man really responsible for whatever success Sally has achieved, is Ben Serkowich, press agent extraordinary, who sits quietly in a two-by-four office in New York thinking up such variations as the bubble dance that keeps Sally on page one of the nation's newspapers . . . Yes, Ben is doing all right by Sally . . . Arnold Rittenberg, who used to manage the old Cameo here for Universal, is producing one-reelers for Columbia . . . Now it turns out that Jack Simons isn't going with the Chatkin Circuit after all . . . The former Aldine manager and Penn press agent is back with Loew's and has left for Hartford to manage Loew's Poli in that city . . . His family has gone to the mountains for the summer . . . Erle Wright, once with the Davis here, more recently with United Artists, is managing Poli's Theater in New Haven . . . The Loew Circuit recently took over the Poli chain . . . Chicago has banned "The Life of Vergie Winters," and what United Artists wouldn't give to have the censors take the boycott off "Scarface" in that town . . . It will be the orchestra conducted by Pat Natarro, former chief usher in the Warner, that will play for that "superstition dance" in McDonald next Friday night, July 13 . . . Jay Johnson and Jimmy Mullooly, Penn ushers, are also listed as impresarios of the McDonald hop . . . Benny Davis, known among theater men as "the best act seller in the business," will take his stage act to New York to appear at the Capitol with the world premiere of Jean Harlow's "Born to Be Kissed" . . . George Raft and Carole Lombard will follow their "success" in "Bolero" with another screen dance drama, "Rhumba" . . . Help! . . . Mrs. Bob Newkirk, wife of the Penn treasurer, is off those crutches, the broken foot being well on the mend . . . George Jaffe, who keeps the burlesque fires burning in this locality, is taking things easy until the curtain goes up on the new season . . . F. Ralph Gervers, formerly with the Penn here, now has Adrienne, the "internatonally known psychic marvel," in tow, and is due soon in this town for a personal appearance.

Harding's Ex-Secretary Now Designer

By LLOYD PANTAGES

HOLLYWOOD, July 11.—One of the MOST wonderful little women in the industry at the moment happens to be ANN HARDING'S ex-secretary, who is now done up as an assistant COSTUME DESIGNER at Fox's Western avenue studio. This little woman herself says that her ideas are so STARTLING they are WAY AHEAD of all other designers, in fact, SO way ahead it will take them YEARS to get hep to it all. The costumes for her FIRST cinema effort, still in the making, have this BRILLIANT soul completely REMAKING the personality of ROSITA MORENO by dressing her in an AIRPLANE outfit with an ELIZABETHIAN collar (guaranteed to blow you right out of any plane and eliminate all necessity for a parachute) and a dainty little EVENING cape made from baby ribbon woven together in a latice design. ALSO an innovation on the Quen Christina belt buckle which is SO tall that the first time MISS MORENO stooped over, she BRUISED her adam's apple.

Since sweetness and light have come to stay, at least this season, all our ex-cowboys are busy DUSTING off their HORSES for a reentry into the wide open spaces. The LATEST return to the 10-gallon hat fold is TIM McCOY, whom Columbia studio describes as being THAT happy with the new trend on account of what he has missed, "The SMELL of leather and the EXCITEMENT of the chase." How RUGGED.

If you are one of the MANY who doubt the authenticity of the number of GARBO-GAPERS, let me hereby testify to no less than TWENTY-TWO favored folk who have been Gazing upon the Swedish star regularly since her American debut. Aside from RICHARD BOLESLAVSKY, her new director, and a few new fellow thespians, LA GARBO will have the ENTIRE crew of cameramen, grips, props, sound technicians, electricians, art director, etc., with her on this her twentieth SUCCESSIVE picture for M-G-M, namely "The Painted Veil." We be wondering does SHE NEVER get tired of looking at the SAME faces?

A very BELIEVABLE happening occurred t'other day when CLARK GABLE arrived at the M-G-M gates with FOUR policemen on the running-board of his car, NOT as a protection against KIDNAPERS, but as AUTOGRAPH hounds. They got their man.

To further the PURITAN era in motion pictures, our own JOHN FARROW will temporarily cast aside authoring to DIRECT one of his MANY brain children, "Beauty and Truth," for M-G-M, the plot of which smacks GREATLY of an AESOP FABLE. What a TREAT for the little kiddies, IDIOSYNCRASIES of two of our better known directors: ERNEST LUBITSCH in a moment of DEEP concentration, pulls a long lock of his hair mouthward and CHEWS on it, often distractedly leaving said lock MISPLACED. LEWIS MILESTONE is at heart a boy DETECTIVE, and will frisk, finger-print and third-degree you on sight if you look VAGUELY like a THUG.

ACE PARADOXES: Although we of the Hollywoods consider ourselves the SUPREME Bohemians of America in our EASY-GOING and UTTERLY unconventional mode of living, GLADYS GEORGE, a recent recruit from the New York stage, must needs arrive in our midst with the STAGGERING statement "Hollywood should learn to relax." Is little old New York perchance just SLUMBERING? Jack La Rue was flatly turned down some nine years ago for a part in the Broadway production "Four Walls" because he was TOO young and now finds himself cast in the picture for M-G-M of the same name.

JOHN GILBERT always wears WOOLEN socks regardless of the weather. JOSEPHINE HUTCHINSON is probably trying to catch the SPIRIT of the late ELEANORA DUSE seeing as how she is NEVER without a compass which once belonged to the celebrated Italian tragedienne.

Through the Nose

THE HERO of this story just isn't. A few of you might sympathize with him, but the majority—unless I miss my guess—will regard Daniel Squilch as being a trifle lower than the temperature at the South Pole.

He loved money, this man. Loved it with all the idolatry of a mother for her first born. He hoarded it, looked at it, talked to it. He spent as little as possible, and felt a great contempt for anyone who thought money was devised to procure enjoyment.

Daniel Squilch had one other affection: women. But in this case, it wasn't love. He liked women because they were pretty and soft and inclined to fall for fancy talk. Sometimes, when it couldn't be avoided, he took them to shows or clubs. But mostly, he invited them to his home, where a couple could spend what is laughingly called a quiet evening.

Now mind you, Mr. Squilch was not stupid. He knew that ladies are sometimes peeved when they discover that they have been usurped by others, and that sometimes, they sue. So Mr. Squilch paid out sums of cash to a slick lawyer as a means of saving greater sums.

It was a poor court calendar indeed which did not list Danny as defendant in a breach of promise suit. He was forever being sued, and the charge was always the same. Grinning, he would go into court and watch his lawyer, tall and bald and dour, plead magnificently that the jury not award a solitary dime to "this scheming, designing woman who tricked the unsophisticated defendant into this sordid mess."

Dan Squilch never lost a case.

One of the few girls he ever met who was not invited to his home was Evelyn. She was a small, wretched looking creature with stringy brown hair. She maintained a nice apartment and had a colored maid called Cleo.

Through a friend, Danny had met Evelyn. He didn't like her at all, but her maid could cook delicacies which Mr. Squilch would not buy. So, for several nights in a row, he invited himself for dinner, and then tried to exit as soon after as was graceful.

Now you can imagine Squilch's surprise, and for once, righteous indignation when his lawyer phoned to say that Evelyn was going to sue him for breach of promise. Danny knew that he had never made love to the girl.

He clowned through the first part of the trial. Behind his hand he mimicked the judge and winked at the jury. Then, all of a sudden, his grin faded. Evelyn was on the stand.

In broken sobs she told of how she innocently fell in love with Danny. How he broke down her modest reserve with fervent promises of matrimony.

Dan felt beads of perspiration on his brow as he glanced at the jury. They were staring at him with hard, cold glances. And when Cleo took the stand and said she had listened at the keyhole and heard him promise to marry Evelyn, he almost choked to death.

Then the judge reviewed the case and sent the jury out to deliberate a verdict. Evelyn sat at a nearby table and sobbed all the way through the summation. Mr. Squilch felt like doing likewise . . .

He made up his mind quickly. He'd pay her half—$25,000—before the jury returned. His lawyer argued against it but Squilch knew better. He didn't want to gamble. He approached Evelyn's attorney and made the arrangements. It was all quickly settled and Danny parted with $25,000 of his beloved dough.

The jury was dismissed, and Squilch grinned as he left court.

"I'm still ahead," he crowed. "Miles ahead. Look. I pay her twenty-five grand. She sued for fifty, didn't she? Okay. I'm twenty-five ahead. Ha! Even a chisler can't beat Danny Squilch. No sir."

It was two nights later. Mr. Squilch was sitting in a well-known Broadway restaurant, treating himself to a cup of coffee. The tablecloth was littered with figures and Danny knitted his brow as he worked a stubby pencil up and down a column of numbers.

As you might expect, he was figuring out how much he'd have to cut from his expenditures during the next five years to make up for the twenty-five thousand.

He saw a man come in and take a table near by. Out of the corner of his eye he saw the newcomer look at him. He saw the man wave and smile, and pretended not to notice.

But after a moment, the man came over.

"Mr. Squilch?" he said, extending a hand.

"Yes," said Squilch, pretending not to notice the hand. "I don't think I know you."

"You should," the stranger said, smiling. "I was juror number six at your trial."

Danny stood up.

"Well, well, well," he yodeled. "Juror number six. Well, did I fool you babies. Did you hear it? Ha! I settled for twenty-five grand while you mugs were out there sticking me for fifty. Ha! Nobody yet was fast enough to put it over on me. No, sir."

The stranger frowned.

"I'm glad you feel that way," he said seriously. "But you don't know what happened. We took one ballot and it was unanimously agreed that the the girl wasn't entitled to a nickel from a respectable businessman like you."

PLAYS AND PLAYERS :-: By William J. Lewis

Oliver Sayler, of New York, who has written several books and many articles about the Russian theatre will head a group of tourists which will go to Moscow for what probably will be the greatest dramatic festival in the history of the world, combining drama, opera and the ballet. Another group from Boston will be headed by Dr. W. L. Dana, of Boston. Dates for the events are September 1-10 and all of the notable theatres of Moscow, including Art Theatres Nos. one and two, the Grand Opera and other houses, will be used to stage more than 300 plays, among which will be 10 classed as masterpieces. Among the more Russian works to be presented will be "Twelfth Night" and "The Flames of Paris," "The Barber of Seville" and "Camille." Gorki, of course, will be represented among the Russian playwrights. His "Yegor Bulichef and Others" will be presented by the First Moscow Art Theatre. The State Jewish Theatre will stage "200,000." Moscow's world-famed directors, Stanislavsky, Nemerovitch-Danchenko, Meyerhold and Tairov, and the leading artists of the most theater-minded city in both hemispheres are members of the festival committee.

Some interesting sidelights of the stage are indicated in a survey of the theatrical situation, past and present, compiled by the Motion Picture Herald with summaries covering the movie, dramatic, radio and song publishing field. It would seem that Joseph Jefferson stands as the champion showman of all time for his own 16,000 performances of "Rip Van Winkle" over a period covering 50 years. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" endured for 40 years, but no star's name is associated with it for any length of time. Jefferson's nearest competitor perhaps is Richard Mansfield, who is credited with having played Cyrano de Bergerac for 20 years, but much of the time it was given as part of his repertoire. Jefferson, too, varied his appearances in "Rip" with the acting of Bob Acres in "The Rivals," and with work in occasional other plays. The living champion appears to be Walter Hampden, who has had Cyrano in his repertoire for 10 years. "The Green Pastures," with four years (in New York and on the road) to its credit, with the original company making the mark, is the modern long-lived play. It already has passed the three years of popularity of "Abie's Irish Rose," but has another season to go to equal the five years of "Lightnin."

It is hardly likely to equal the records of "Ben Hur," 15 years, "Music Master" and "The Man From Home," 12 years each, "Arizona," "The Sunny Man," 10 years each, another besides "Lightnin'" with a five-year record as a box-office earner was "Seventh Heaven."

Bessie Braham, the tall comedienne of the "Follies," who left Pittsburgh audiences a little cold, but who made a hit in New York, has been given a dramatic assignment as leading woman in "Love On An Island," by Hiram Dewitch.

James Rennie will play the male lead . . . Frances Starr, Belasco star of other days, who returned to the stage last season in "The Lake," will have a principal role in "The Old Folks at Home," new play by A. E. Harwood . . . Ethel Barrymore will appear next week in Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., in a summer tryout of "Laura Garnett" . . . Carol Stone, youngest of the daughters of Fred Stone, will play the leading role Meichoir Lengyl's "The Spartan," having its American premiere in East Hampton, Long Island, tonight.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, Attacking New Policies, Is Not An Antagonist to Be Despised

By Edwin C. Hill

MR. BORAH, of Idaho, doesn't think much of the Wonder Boys of Washington. The Brain Trusters give him a pain in the neck. And he is able, without too much strain, to conceal his enthusiasm for the New Dealers generally. Almost as good at timing his political strokes as the gentleman in the White House, the Idaho Senator waited until what he sensed was the psychological moment before casting wreaths of the wild raspberry around the necks of the professors who point the way to the millennium.

He comes right out with the blunt statement that they aren't good Americans at all, but a funny lot with quite un-American notions. He sees the traditional and constitutional American liberties being undermined and broken down, and, by inference at least, ignores the emphatic statement made recently over the radio by President Roosevelt that both the spirit and letter of democratic government and the Bill of Rights will be preserved.

Now, Bill Borah is not an antagonist to despise or underestimate. One doubts very much if any man or any set of men can accomplish much for months to come, at least, toward damming the star of Franklin D. Roosevelt, but if anybody can dull even slightly the glamor which surrounds the President, like the auras in mediaeval religious paintings, that somebody would be the hard-hitting, brilliant-spoken gentleman from Boise City, the second best orator in the United States.

The first best (in the opinion of this writer) is the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, Charles Evans Hughes.

No, the Democratic political chiefs may be quite untroubled by the attacks made on the New Deal by such as Ogden Mills and Dr. Fess and other Republican wheelhorses.

The astute Charley Michaelson, publicity wizard for the Democratic party, may grin tolerantly when Chairman Fletcher raps the administration, and Big Jim Farley may look pained when wicked persons hint that patronage is just as important to him as purity, but when Borah gets up on his hind legs and howls they take notice. It is a harbinger of trouble to come.

Borah Attacks In Weakest Spot

IN ONE short address Borah packed a bigger punch than the regular Republicans had been able to put into a hundred speeches and articles for the past six months. He attacked the administration in its weakest spot—in its bureaucratic appendix.

One phrase alone of that address of Borah's deserves preservation:

"It is simply that meddlesome, irritating, confusing, undermining, destructive thing called Bureaucracy."

He was describing broadly the present regime in Washington.

He is a bad man to go up against, Borah, even though he is a lone wolf. Always he has been the lone wolf. He was Theodore Roosevelt's floor manager in the 1912 Republican convention. He battled for the Lord, but he was late for Armageddon. He spoke mildly for Harding's election, but declined to run on the same ticket with Coolidge. He helped to put Herbert Hoover in the White House—and left him there at the front door.

What manner of man is this most interesting personality in all Congress? No one could ever mistake him for any person except himself. His square head, his dark eyebrows almost meeting above his short nose and shading his keen but kindly eyes; his long upper lip, firm mouth, strong, cleft chin; his thick hair parted in the middle and growing rather long at the back—all are peculiarly his. His eyes are blue with black pupils that give vividness and intensity to his expression. His voice is deep and mellow, and he gives the right value to words, with a shading of tone. He would have made a first rate actor or minister. For the fanaticism of the evangelist is combined in this remarkable man with the emotionalism of the actor.

Jimmy Walker Living in England

HAPPILY established at Dorking, England, the debonaire Jimmy Walker shuns the night life and is rarely seen in London. He works sporadically in his cheerful, leisurely fashion, but expresses fear that something will turn up which will compel him to return to a more strenuous life.

"I feel that I am just beginning to live," says the erstwhile mayor, who certainly gave no evidence of feeling otherwise while in New York. Dispatches from London say he has gained 10 pounds.

One wonders if Jimmy, in a reminiscent vein, doesn't philosophize on how deeply rooted he is to the soil of New York, and if a trace of nostalgia doesn't creep into his moods at times.

Apropo of nostalgia, perhaps there is more of it felt in New York than in any other place in the world, considering that New York is a mecca for humanity from the four corners of the earth.

Some of these migrators come to learn, some to play, but most come with the idea that it is easier to get rich in New York than anywhere else. The depression has taught them that it is just as easy to become poor. However, it is a chance they take, and some achieve their aim. Ranging from bootblack to professional man, they work zealously, and throughout their days of labor anticipate their reward—the return to their native heath, even if it is only to recapture a glimpse of some familiar scene, or to embrace loved ones.

White of hair and bent with age, sometimes they loom loftily in their particular field, but almost always there is a magnet pulling at them, for the soil they come from is the soil that calls. They may have fame and money, but they are not quite content.

Byrd Speaks To Alaska Tonight

By AIRCASTER

When Arctic talks to Antarctic via the CBS chain tonight, it will be over one of the longest radio circuits ever set up.

Starting at a point about 250 miles north of Nome, on the barren coast of Alaska, the circuit, by short wave, will touch Honolulu, then jump over to San Francisco.

The next leap, to New York, will be via land wire. Short waves again come in for the last two links, New York to Buenos Aires and thence to Little America.

Altogether that is approximately 20,250 miles.

This feature, part of which will be a two-way conversatin between Bob Flagler, in charge of the Arctic station, and Charles J. V. Murphy, radio operator at Little America, will be in the regular WJAS Byrd broadcast.

THE LAST STRAW

His pals at the pioneer station are smacking their lips over John Gihen's description of New Orleans mint juleps, and raising their eyebrows at some of his tales of Louisiana bats and snakes and insects.

For the first, gently bruise a few sprigs of mint in a teaspoonful of sugar; fill a tall glass with finely cracked ice; add amber spirits to taste and stir well, without touching the glass, so it will frost.

Pack shaved ice into a jigger and turn the molded ice upside down on the already-filled tall glass; touch a few drops of grenadine to the mound of shaved ice.

Place three straws and a sprig of fragrant mint in the ice; fix a fancy snip of lemon peel to the tip of one of the straws; a delicate rosebud to another.

Then, with palms down and touching the glass with only your fingernail tips, gently slide it across the table with a formal bow to your guest. He'll take care of the third straw.

And from the same country, and perhaps by the same token, John brings back stories of bright blue snakes, bats as big as buzzards and grasshoppers five and six inches long.

Dick Fulton, of the Pioneers' Quartet, leaves on Monday for a week's visit with Hervey Allen ("Anthony Adverse") at Allen's summer home in the heart of Maryland.

BLEDSOE SINGS 'EMPEROR'

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—Negro grand opera came into its own last night.

To aid the Negro singer, the Aeolian Opera Association opened a summer season in Mecca Auditorium with all-Negro casts.

The inaugural was that best-seller of American operas, Louis Gruenberg's adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's "Emperor Jones"—given its world premier two season ago at the Metropolitan with Lawrence Tibbett in the title role.

Last night, it was Jules Bledsoe—the "Ol' Man River" of "Show Boat."

"Emperor Jones" is not new to Bledsoe. He shared with Paul Robeson the creation of the role of the Pullman porter-turned-emperor in its first run on the legitimate stage. Last winter, he sang the role in Amsterdam at its first presentation as an opera abroad.

Girl Suicide's Body Remains in Morgue

Despite the fact that the County Commissioners have contributed $150 for a burial for Lucy Callen, 16-year-old ward of the Gumbert Industrial School, who ended her life by hanging in the basement of the institution Sunday night, her body still lay in the Morgue today. Formal identification was made late yesterday by a brother, Reuben Callen.

Something New in a Smartly Caped Frock

Sun-Telegraph 15c Pattern

Every woman who has ever worn one loves a caped frock . . . especially if she tips the scales to a few more ounces than she would like. But this is a caped frock plus two very novel and smart looking jabots with which the front of the collar is attached to the dress. They do nothing to increase the difficulty in making and add such a lot of chic whether you use lace or sheer cotton of which to make them or something a bit heavier like crepe de chine. Some of the new synthetic crepes are most attractive and they are usually washable . . . which is important.

Pattern 1829 is available in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 takes 3⅞ yards 39-inch fabrics. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send 15 CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

The smartest warm weather fashions, the newest fabrics and the summer season's outstanding accessories are illustrated and described in the NEW PATTERN BOOK FOR SUMMER. ORDER YOUR COPY OF THIS HELPFUL NEW SUMMER BOOK. PRICE OF BOOK, 15 CENTS. BOOK AND PATTERN TOGETHER, 25 CENTS.

This Year travel "ABROAD" to Historic QUEBEC

Take your "foreign" vacation on this side of the Atlantic—across the border in Quebec where old-world France lives again. Quaint, sleepy villages nestling under spires of stately churches, native handicraft shops, wayside shrines — they fairly breathe history and romance.
If you prefer a more conventional vacation, stop at a gay resort on the Lower St. Lawrence, or go further north into the Laurentian Mountains. Visit cosmopolitan Montreal and historic Quebec City, too. Write, 'phone or stop in—for complete information.

GLOBE TROTTING

Hello, Ladies and Gentlemen:

The hiccough remedies are starting to come in and some of them seem so practical that I think I will publish a few not only for the benefit of the gentlemen in Ambridge who has been suffering from a continual attack for four years but also for the Globe Trotter who gets the occasional visitation.

Place a lead pencil under your tongue; then take a drink of water; repeat several times, is the remedy suggested by Mrs. C. A. Scharsen, Tarentum, who has always found it effective.

Ed. Wettach suggest an oseopathic treatment.

Mrs. Eva C. Daley, South Highland avenue, says that one teaspoonful lavender compound mixed with two teaspoonfuls of whisky is an excellent remedy.

I want to thank the doctors who have offered their services to the member of Mrs. Dionise's family. Mrs. Dionise lives in Ambridge.

There'll be a truck over at Mrs. Arthur's in McKees Rocks for a bed she is offering to a needy Globe Trotter comrade and you can expect the same truck at 7411 Hermitage street for the bed and the child's walker.

Is somebody going to be happy?

Every day is Christmas to the Globe Trotters.

On Friday, I'm not sure yet which broadcast, we are going to welcome a popular Globe Trotter who will be in the city on that date.

He is Jack Dempsey.

I hope you'll be on hand to give him a nice radio reception.

SPEAK UP, SISTERS :-: Glances Into the Realms of Domesticity and Romance :-: By MARION BRUNOT

Girls Worry About Boys Who Are Absent

Worry and More Worry are in deep. Their boy friends have flown the coop and are chasing about town with other girls. And, worse still, when they called up these wanderers, they were told that the fellows were TOO BUSY to TALK.

It all began with an argument. The girls were KIDDING TOO HARD, and the boys resented it.

There were two of them. And they bucked each other up. And walked out together.

And the girls were left high and dry.

Dear Miss Brunot:

We are not just a couple of love sick girls, but we are having trouble. Here is our cry: We have been going with two fellows for quite some time. The other evening we began kidding and got into an argument, and the boys left, and aren't speaking to us.

Miss Brunot

These fellows haven't shown up for a week, and we know truthfully that they have been going with two other girls. We were to have seen them one afternoon, and due to a misunderstanding these two others girls butted in, and got them.

BOYS "TOO BUSY"

We have called them up, but they said they were too busy to talk.

The truth is, Miss Brunot, we like and admire these boys very much, and would like to have them back. How might we accomplish this task?

WORRY AND MORE WORRY.

Not by telephone, at least, sisters. You've tried that, and it didn't work. I'd rest awhile and let the boys catch up with themselves. They said they were TOO BUSY, you know.

In the meanwhile, find a couple of other young men not so hard at their labors. If these two really like you, after they have weighed the pros and cons, chances are they'll come back. The thing is, they, too can talk it all out, just as you two can. That is where team work sometimes does not account for so much, as riding singly.

The two other girls may be playing seconds. Wait and see. I would put the "kidding" aside for awhile. It isn't always good entertainment.

TWO BOY FRIENDS

Dear Miss Brunot:

My case is a very common one.

I am 16 years of age, and in junior high. I have always been very popular with both sexes. Like other girls I have had the average crushes on various boys, but have always gotten over them. Sometimes even before they were well begun.

However, I find myself more than interested in a boy for whom I have been falling for about two years. He is one year my senior. He is good looking, polite, and an exceeding amiable personality. He seems interested in me.

For five months we went everywhere together and had the most marvelous times. We liked the same things and have dispositions very much alike. New Years eve and New Years night we went out as usual.

Following that evening, he seemed to change. At first I thought it would be for but a short time, but as the months passed by, I have tried to forget him. For I do not think it wise for a girl so young to take any boy too seriously. All my ideas are in the air, though, for I find myself thinking more and more of him. I simply worship everything he does.

At the present he is dating another girl often, and I am going with another fellow. This fellow is a different type. He is an athlete, but rather bashful. He does not like dances, which I attend. But he is good and generous.

As the boy I love lives near me and I am over there often, I naturally see him. At parties, etc., he seeks my company almost as much as he does the other girl's with whom he is dating.

He has never stopped speaking to me and we seem to be the best of friends. At times he has advised me not to date as steadily as I do.

My family prefer him to the other fellow. The boy in question and myself never petted. Recently, however, I have been petting with the other fellow. Only moderately, of course.

What should I do? Should I give up the athlete, in hopes of getting my old friend back? What would you suggest? I have told my present boy friend of my feelings for the other.

HOPEFUL.

A SHARP HINT

The fact that you are as young as you are, makes my advice a little different than if you were an older girl.

I really believe your old beau, and the one you say you care for, was passing you out a sharp hint when he suggested you would not date so steadily with another. He very likely has resolved not to be serious with any girl at his age, and intends keeping his resolve. Perhaps it was a New Years resolution, as your break occurred at that time.

I like his manliness and his character. And yet, sister, if you keep on going with the athlete and petting, the chances are you will lose the entire contact with the first boy friend. He won't allow himself to THINK of you. That would be true to his type.

The fact that you have spoken to your new friend of the old one, and that he knows the situation, shows one of two things. He either does not care enough for you to be jealous, or he believes so much in himself that he feels sure he will in time, beat the other fellow out. Maybe he will, too. Distance lends enchantment, but gets the girl.

By FAY KING.

There is a small fault to which, it seems, the majority of feminine minds are addicted. It is a flaw which may easily be corrected, and which women should make an effort to correct.

This reference is to those caustic and critical little comments women make about persons they observe in a gathering of any sort, or someone who may pass by.

It is unnecessary, uncalled for, and does not impress an escort favorably.

How seldom, if ever, do we hear our male friend make any comment one way or the other about those he may be observing.

Now women are not as ungenerous and "catty" as these thoughtless expressions make them seem, and that is why they should never voice them.

SUMMER COSTUME JEWELRY ACCENTS

By PRUNELLA WOOD

Very simple summer gowns—the kind of frocks which look cool because they are so simple—can do with a highlight of decoration. The difference between a snappy white costume and one that looks considerably like a plain uniform is very often a matter of a bright accent such as a matching scarf and belt and a bold necklace and bracelet. And a pale chiffon may look slightly wishy-washy if it isn't set off by something striking, which for formal purposes should be a piece or two of costume jewelry.

Once upon a time you had to fetch your own branch coral from Italy; it was as much the badge of a tourist as paper stickers on your luggage, and when you had it, it wasn't very alluring. More of a gesture than a treasure.

But today you can find branch coral at the jewelry counters all braided up into stunning ropes, set off by heavy beaten metal gadgets, or delicate filigree bits, ready to contribute a splashing note to any old dress that seems to lack one. Heavy-looking earrings of the same cheerful orange material can be found, and they certainly have all the dignity of treasured heirlooms.

The pearl bead is the only one that lots of women fancy. They feel that any costume jewelry rather overwhelms them and they are smart enough to avoid it. But wonderful things are done with pearl beads these days. There are ropes of flower or fruit motifs woven from them. They are used to set off crystal beads of pale, cool colors such as amethyst or topaze, and they are extremely useful in tieing together the loose ends of a color ensemble in the casual costume.

There are lots of bright composition jewelry ensembles of the type known as 'sports' jewelry, for want of a surer term. A couple of inches on one wrist can be given over to them and button earrings and a big ring of the same shade and material added to the arrangement to build up a dashing effect.

Carved wooden beads are amusing, and often smart with linen dresses or cabana lounging clothes. The bright silver metal corkscrew slave choker and wrist shackle of Lanvin is one of the handiest junk jewelry newcomers, as it jacks up any type of daytime costume to new highs.

Top, real branch coral strung to dull gold filigree motifs make a stunning rope and bracelet for afternoon or evening wear. Center, a chocker of white seed beads woven into a rope which is looped through a cylinder of red catalin. Directly above, gold filigree daisies combined with white seed beads for a choker and bracelet.

The pearl string sketched above is finished with pearl grapes designed with gold leaves and gold fringe.

How to Keep Well

How to Aid Victim of 'Faint'

Nothing is more alarming than to see a friend in a sudden fainting spell. But it is equally distressing not to know how to help the victim. Proper handling of such a situation may spare the victim serious after effects.

Dr. Copeland

As a rule alarm and undue excitement are created by this common accident. Many gather around the unconscious victim and, instead of aiding him, deprive him of necessary fresh air.

It is often possible to prevent a fainting attack. The following treatment is, of course, only of value before the actual faint occurs: When feeling faint it is best to lie down with the head at a lower level than the body. Raise the legs on a chair or prop them and the lower part of the body up with pillows.

Another good plan is to bend the body forward, bringing the head below the knees. Then grasp the victim's head at the back, hold it firmly and instruct him to bring his head up. In your turn, when he attempts to do so, exert firm pressure on the head. As a result of this pressure and exertion, as well as the lowering of the head, more blood is brought to the brain and the faint is averted.

Fainting is in reality a temporary loss of consciousness caused by temporary weakness of the heart and lack of blood in the brain. This heart weakness may be the result of undue exposure to heat, excessive fatigue, fright or lack of nourishment.

It may be the result of some organic disturbance. Repeated attacks of syncope or fainting should arouse suspicion of some disorder within the body, and the family physician consulted.

I am often asked how to aid a person who has really fainted. The first thing to remember is to keep calm and assure others that there is no need for alarm or anxiety. Place the victim on a bed or in the position I have described, with the head lower than the rest of the body. If no pillows are available this can be done up rolling up some coats or whatever else happens to be at hand and placing them under the victim.

A few drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia, placed on a swab of cotton or a handkerchief and held beneath the nose will be helpful. If the patient can swallow encourage the drinking of water to which a few drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia have been added. But do not attempt this if the patient is unconscious, because it may cause choking.

Loosen the clothes and remove all constricting garments such as collar, tie, belt or girdle. Provide as much fresh air as possible. Cold compresses to the head, slapping the face and hands, and spraying cold water on the face, are some of the popular and useful ways of reviving the sufferer.

Contract Bridge -:- HOW TO PLAY and HOW TO WIN

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

An Undeserved Reward

The gods of chance are not always the most just of deities. In some mythical Utopian country hundreds of years after our time, if Contract Bridge is still played I am quite certain that the gods will treat each player exactly as he deserves. In that country the player who has overbid decisively will never be able to make his contract, and he who has underbid and missed a game will not pick up a still bigger hand the next time. Unfortunately, we are living in Utopia. On today's hand, which occurred in a recent Rubber game, North and South each drastically overbid, but due to a fortunate division of the opponents cards and, I must admit, some very fine play on the part of the Declarer, an overly ambitious Grand Slam contract was fulfilled.

South, Dealer.
Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ 7 4 ♡ 6 ◇ A Q 5 3 2 ♣ 10 9 8 4 3
♠ 6 5 3 ♡ K 10 4 2 ◇ K J 7 ♣ J 6 2	West / North / East / South	♠ Q 10 9 8 ♡ Q J 7 5 ◇ 10 9 6 4 ♣ 5
	♠ A K J 2 ♡ A 9 8 3 ◇ 8 ♣ A K Q 7

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣ (1)	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 ♠ (2)	Pass	3 ♣ (3)	Pass
7 ♣ (4)	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—The weakness of South's third suit, hearts, makes a two-bid inadvisable.

2—Using the practically Forcing feature of the "One over One" response.

3—North's distribution justifies the three-club response, despite the scarcity of honor strength.

4—A definite overbid. It might have been the heat, it might have been excessive faith in the bidding of North, or it might have been an effort on the part of South to get back all the points he had lost earlier in the day. South should have temporized by bidding three hearts, eventually carrying the bidding to at least six and leaving the decision as to whether or not to bid the Grand Slam to his partner.

Against the Grand Slam contract West made the perfectly safe Opening lead of a low trump. The Declarer instantly realized that he would have a difficult task to fulfill his contract and that the hand was of the type which requires that the Dummy rather than the closed hand be set up. South played a second round of trumps to ascertain if that suit broke. If the clubs broke 2-2 South could fulfill his contract if the King of diamonds dropped on the third round, or by taking a diamond finesse and subsequently setting up Dummy's thirteenth card of that suit. When the clubs did not break, South saw that there was a lot of work in store for him. He saw one chance and played for it in the following manner:

To Trick 3 the Declarer led his singleton diamond and finessed the Queen in Dummy. When this held, the Ace of diamonds was played and another diamond led and ruffed with South's low club. South now played out his last trump, drawing West's last trump also, and then played the Ace of hearts and ruffed a heart in Dummy. South now led the last trump from Dummy and discarded a heart from his own hand. (Incidentally, it is most unusual during the play of a hand for the Declarer to be out of trumps while there are still two remaining in Dummy.) The lead of the last club from Dummy completely squeezed East. He was forced to retain the top diamond to prevent the two diamonds in Dummy from taking tricks and had to discard one of his spades. South, of course, now led a spade from Dummy and finessed the Jack. Since East had been forced to discard a spade, the Ace, King and deuce of spades in South's hand won the last three tricks.

As a result North and South won the rubber, plus the large vulnerable Grand Slam bonus—a reward which they certainly did not deserve because of their very bad overbidding. Possibly the gods of chance admire good play more than they do good bidding.

Sardines for Supper

For the quickly prepared supper when there is little in the house besides a few tins of sardines, some bread and coffee and other small odds and ends, the sardines will be very useful and of more substance if you cook them in their own oil, turning them from one side to the other very frequently. Serve on toast with a dash of lemon for flavoring.

Boys Sorry Madge Is Scared

As Hugh Grantland heard my voice calling Junior and Roderick, and telling them to come to me upon the instant, he gave a hoarse little exclamation, dropped his hands and took a step forward. Jim, slower of comprehension, kept his hands elevated for fully two seconds before, with a chuckle, he dropped them.

It was my turn to caution them in the interval of silence that followed my call. I guessed that the small boys were so panic-stricken at the knowledge that I was one of the "enemies" they had been stalking, that they might very easily let fly another volley from their air rifles, without meaning to fire another shot.

"Don't move!" I whispered. "I'll see to them. But I don't want them frightened into firing another volley from those air rifles of theirs."

For when I had recognized the queer, croaking sound as coming from Junior's throat, the whole solution of their mysterious escapade had dawned upon me. I had been with them once in the orchard when they were practicing hitting a target with their air rifles, which Dicky had given them over my protest, but which they have used with such restraint and moderation as to banish most of my fears.

Watching Roderick shoot on that occasion, I had not seen Junior come behind me until a deep, croaking voice commanded "Hands up!" and I had wheeled just in time to see my small son drop a cone of newspaper through which he had sent his voice to play a joke upon me. I had laughed at the joke, but later had explained to him and to Roderick that it must never be played upon a woman or a child, for fear of the consequences, should the recipient of the prank be of a nervous temperament.

But now, knowing all my small son's vagaries, I was fairly sure of one thing—that he had not uttered in jest the command which had just come to us; that there was some fantastic reason for this absurd action of his.

I spoke again after those two seconds of panic-stricken silence.

"Don't be frightened, boys!" I said softly. "You have hurt us all, but you didn't hit our eyes, and the bruises won't matter. But you must come to me now and explain what all this means. Uncle Hugh and Jim are here with me. Drop your air rifles just where they are—we'll pick them up later—and come straight to me."

There was no sound for a fraction of a second longer. Then there came a low, heartfelt "Gee!" from Junior's lips, echoed almost at once by Roderick. But to my surprise and bewilderment, the small boys did not crash through the bushes to us immediately, but began to creep toward us, if the waving leaves were any indication. And when the bushes parted and their tousled heads appeared, they put their fingers upon their lips in a ludicrous gesture of caution.

"Don't talk loud!" Junior whispered. "You'll spoil everything!" Then, with a sudden abandonment of his swagger, he threw himself into my arms, and began to sob like the remorseful, frightened little boy he was.

"Oh, Mums!" he wailed, but still in a whisper. 'I might have put out your eyes. We never dreamed you or anybody we knew was anywhere around. We were guarding this side of the clearing—Hank and Bill overlooked it, I guess—and when we heard you coming through the bushes and saw you were folks instead of animals we told you 'Hands up.' We didn't mean to shoot, honest, even at the Chinamen, but I guess our fingers slipped."

"I guess they did," Hugh said grimly, in tones even lower than Junior's. "But now, my lad, when you've given your mother another hug, you and Roderick must come clean about this. I suppose you realize that you've frightened your mother almost to death this morning."

The oddest sensation came over me that I had ever experienced. I found myself fiercely resenting this bit of disciplining of Junior on Hugh's part. No one except his father or me had a right to speak to my small son in that fashion, I told myself.

"I'll talk to him about frightening me. Please talk to him about the other matter."

Correct Manners

Announcing Marriage

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My father and mother are both dead. I am to be married. Should I announce the marriage myself, and how should the announcement be worded

The reception is to be strictly a family affair. O.

You may, if you wish, have some relative announce your marriage—your grandmother and grandfather (or either), your uncle and aunt (or either), an older married sister and her husband, or a married brother and his wife. Or if there is no relative that you wish to have make this announcement, you and your fiance may make the announcement in your own names. Then the announcement reads like this:

Miss Mary Elizabeth Warren and
Mr. Thomas Wells Robinson announce their marriage
Saturday, the first of August
Nineteen hundred and thirty-four Salem, Massachusetts

No Help, Thanks

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for a young lady to assist a young man in putting on his top-coat .... especially in a public place?

Would the same rule apply to an older man? H.

A woman should not make any attempt to help a man with his top-coat. He doesn't welcome this "service," and is usually annoyed or embarrassed by this attention. And he wants to take care of his own hat, too. He doesn't want a girl to hold his hat in the theater, or to help him with his coat, or to take his hat and coat when he entered a home. He wants to be told where he is to place his hat and coat.

Of course this does not hold true when a man is crippled or a very old man, for in both cases there is a distinct and obvious opportunity for the girl or woman to be of service.

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Keep in mind, those of you who love perfume, that the human nose soon becomes unaware of your favorite scent. Don't keep on using more and more; you may offend the members of the family who will sneer and say things.

Sweet odors should be sprayed upon the skin. Perfume the wardrobe with sachet bags. Tuck them in hat, glove and handkerchief boxes. Attach them to dress and coat hangers. That is one way of saving money for more perfume, and other sweet things of the toilet table.

The white-haired sister must guard against strong shampoo liquids, never use tonics containing glycerine which will turn her locks blonde. Wetting the hair, doing it up in curlers, is likely to lay on the canary tint. And, of course, the hot iron will place a color curse upon it.

Snowy crests should glisten. Whites of egg combined with soap suds make an excellent cleansing agent. At cosmetic counters the cotton-topped lady can purchase special bluings that act as mild bleaches. A few drops are added to a bowl of water, to be used for the final rinsing.

AIR LINES WARN COUNTY AIRPORT MAY BE 'FLAG STOP'

GIRL JUMPER'S DEATH LAID TO EXTRA CHUTE

U. S. Air Rules Cause Of Tragedy, Says Victim's Partner

Department of Commerce regulations requiring jumpers to carry an emergency parachute were blamed today for the fatal accident last Sunday when Lois Sangelo, 21, pretty blonde parachute jumper, plunged to death at Wilkinsburg Airport.

George Walters, teammate of the young woman in their parachute jumping act, said he believed Lois caught her hand in the emergency parachute as she jumped and was unable to pull the rip cord to release her "chute."

Walters told his story to Herbert Allen, deputy coroner who investigated the fatal leap.

Walters, who jumps under the name "Donnie Marshall," protested the regulation requiring the use of two parachutes, contending the extra device caused more trouble that it was worth.

The two unopened chutes found on Lois after she fell are held by the coroner pending the arrival tomorrow of a government inspector.

FOUR CLEAR MAN AS SLAYER

Although Max Torin, father of Charles Torin, 21, fatally wounded in a Center avenue holdup three weeks ago, had identified Lee Jones, Negro, of Boston, as his son's slayer, four other witnesses yesterday said Jones was not the man who fired the fatal shot.

Jones was returned to Pittsburgh from Easton, Pa., Monday. He still is to face three additional witnesses.

Seeks New Record For 'Chute Jumps

An attempt to break the world's record for consecutive parachute jumps will be made by Otto Hoover, of New Alexandria, at the Greensburg airport next Sunday. He will take off from the field in a plane piloted by "Happy" O'Brien, airport manager, at 4:30 p. m., and will continue jumping until dark.

The present record is 17 jumps in one day. Hoover will try to surpass this number by five jumps.

Women Drug Man, Rob Him of $75

Two young women who, police said, drugged and robbed R. H. Stevenson, who gave his address as the Twenty-eighth Street Y. M. C. A., were being sought today. Stevenson reported to police late yesterday he met the two women Monday night and accompanied them to a Penn avenue store, where he was given "knockout drops," police said. Awakening a short time later, he discovered that he had been robbed of $75 in cash and his watch and ring.

Man Killed at Party, Host Faces Charges

WILL ROGERS SAYS

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:
MULESHOE, Texas, July 11.

Flew all night just to get over here to the Mashed O outfit to the calf branding at Ewing Halsell's, an old boyhood friend. They are branding 5,000 calves, but the whole cattle country is mighty dry, the government is doing what they can to help 'em out, but even a Democrat can't make it rain. But they are going to bring that up at the next Congress. There is no finer and more satisfying business in the world than the cow business, when you get half a chance, but when the elements are agin' you, you are just like a candidate that's run second. This is a part of the famous X. I. T. Ranch, that was the biggest in the world. An English syndicate got it for building "Ma" and "Jim" a state capitol in Austin.

Yours,
WILL.

'MY OWN STORY' -:- -:- -:- By Marie Dressler

Prayed for Studios to Send Out Lifeline When She Stood on Burning Deck With Deep Water Ahead

Marie Dressler, the funniest woman in America, was born in a small town in Canada. After a series of ups and downs on the stage, she decided that in order to achieve success one must keep her troubles to herself. Her first big success was "Tillie's Nightmare," which sent her on the road to "hats with ostrich feathers as long as any in Newport."

Then came reverses on the stage and in her financial investments. She learned that no "vice" is as bad as "advice." Despite pleas and warnings, she set out for Hollywood without a contract and pounded the pavements searching for a job.

CHAPTER III.

It grew embarrassing to live at the Ambassador. When I arrived there everybody assumed that I was up some company's sleeve. I naturally let this assumption ride. Then they would say, "Let us in on the secret. What picture are you scheduled for?"

In reply to these questions I had to smile and look mysterious, and it's mighty hard to say nothing and look mysterious for two months with my open nature. Everybody could see that if I was up some company's sleeve it ought to begin to bulge by then. Finally people began to inquire when I was going back to New York. This made me decide to look permanent—so I leased a house.

Now I had owned houses before. I bought a place in the rush of enthusiasm and extravagance when I was making a lot of money in "Tillie's Nightmare." How well I remember it! The barn had 16 stalls, so I bought 16 cows and I was perfectly entranced with delight when I received word that the 16 cows had made $91. Of course, I got a statement later that it cost $201 to make the $91, but no owner of an estate ever quibbles over a detail like that. It's not farmer's etiquette.

Gets a Home, But No Job

It was at that time that I tried raising chickens that wouldn't set, ducks that got drowned and everything that wouldn't grow. The final straw was buying a carload of hardy plants, which turned out to be hardy, but not foolhardy. I swore that I would never again have anything to do with another house. The circumstances, however, were now different, because any fool could raise plants in California.

Usually one buys or builds a house and starts a garden. In California you buy a garden and hope there is a house with it. Well, I saw a garden and went mad. Luckily, there was a house on it with all future improvements.

With a house on my hands and no job in sight I was up against it. Instead of the picture of a determined woman looking for work by rooting myself in the soil, ironically enough I gave the impression of a jolly woman from the East who was out there for the sunshine and flowers. I realized now that if I were actually starving to death and told any of my friends the sad fact, they would think I was trying to be funny and would pass me a caviar sandwich while I was reaching for cabbage.

I tell you this little girl stood on the burning deck, deep water ahead, and the scenery was going up in flames behind!

Dame Fortune Finally Smiles

I prayed that the movie studios would send out a lifeline. I hoped that they would add a derrick and a landing net. Yet in my wildest dreams it never occurred to me that anyone could climb to fame, be dropped into obscurity, and again be whirled to triumph greater than any I had known in the heyday of my former success. I had been feeling like a regular Jonah. I didn't like the burning deck, but I was afraid to jump lest a whale should come along and swallow me. But a miracle lay ahead! This time Jonah was going to swallow the whale!

Of course, I first had to catch the whale. I'd been angling for any small fry that might come to the hook—a bite from a shiner would have thrilled me at this stage! But the cork on the top of the water and even my angle-worm wasn't nibbled.

A fisherman doesn't feel discouraged if his bait is swallowed, though he doesn't land his fish. To tempt a whale's appetite it seems you can't use the pickled minnows one sees in fishing tackle windows nor the sardines from delicatessen stores. Moreover, few people fish for whales, so no one has bothered to write a book on whale angling.

Then one day the bait for the whale appeared. Frances Marion, who I think has contributed more to the movies than 20 other writers, sent for me. I could have a part—a part, at last! Right on top of that I was offered $150 per week for eight weeks to play the role of the Queen Mother in the stage version of "The Swan."

Since these opportunities were simultaneous it was a great temptation to inform the producers of the play that I was through with the stage, but I didn't. One can never tell what form opportunity will take. A small object that may look like a button sometimes proves to be an acorn—and one can sit pretty under the shade of the oak later.

MARIE DRESSLER, BELOVED QUEEN OF HOLLYWOOD, IN CHARACTER AS SHE APPEARED IN THE PHOTOPLAY "PROSPERITY"

In Picture With Polly Moran

I do love to mix my metaphors. I may employ burning decks, whales, acorns and Congress to dress up my thoughts, but I use them on the principle that if you don't understand one, another might be more enlightening, just as one of my great theories of life is to go round driving contact tacks—if one goes in, fine and dandy; if none goes in, that's all right, too.

Well, when Frances Marion sent for me, I went off in a body. I was to be Ma Callahan in "The Callahans and the Murphys," in which Polly Moran and I established our game of give and take which has appeared in "Caught Short," "Reducing," and other pictures since. We are like that old idea of a perfect match—"Him so dark and her so fair."

One thing leads to another, as they always say. I next appeared in "Bringing Up Father," then in a picture with Constance Talmadge called "Breakfast in Bed." "The Divine Lady," "One Romantic Night," etc., followed. I felt contented and happy and grateful. I was working again. No part was too small, no gratitude was too great for having been given this chance. I was willing to have all work and no play because it made lots of jack and I could likewise write home to my friends in the East that I was in pictures.

Experiences Another Low Tide

Here's another detour! We all do more for the good opinion of our friends or the envy of our enemies than we do for ourselves. Funny, isn't it? Folks who have neither severest critics nor dearest enemies sit on a park bench and don't mind it. If you can't make friends to make good to—get a successful enemy. I was fortunate to have friends who believed in me, but, honestly—I am sure there is no human being who doesn't need a gallery, either friendly or unfriendly, to play to.

If you were on a desert island and never expected to be rescued, you wouldn't exert yourself beyond getting food and shelter. Make friends—for they make you! Even a mild enemy is an asset. He's gasoline in your tank to feed your speed.

Fortunately I wasn't spreading any peacock feathers, just emulating the hardworking hen, when there came another year of idleness. Perhaps this was harder to bear than the long hyphen of nothing-to-do which went before. People kept writing me to ask what my next picture was and told me that they had followed my films around from de luxe house to where-were-they.

Although I did only bits and was not starred, in many cases the house managers had stuck my name out in front in the great open spaces beneath the stars.

Now followed another low tide. It was so long there wasn't enough water to float a pollywog, much less a whale.

CUT IN CHARGES FOR LANDING DEMANDED

TWA Says Business Is Penalized By Rate Schedule

Three major air lines, carrying passengers, mail and express, today threatened to by-pass Pittsburgh, making the city a flag-stop instead of the hub of aerial transportation of the nation if rates at the Allegheny County Airport are not reduced commensurate with charges on other municipally owned airports.

Spokesmen for the three lines—Transcontinental and Western Air, Central Airlines and Pennsylvania Airlines—joined in the protest of L. P. Arnold, assistant to the president of TWA, who made public a letter to the County Commissioners.

BUSINESS INCREASES

Arnold said:

"It is obvious that if the present schedule of rates remains in effect we must route future schedules so as to pass Pittsburgh entirely, which action we are hopeful can be avoided."

In voicing his company's complaint of existing rates, Arnold cites the increased business in ticket sales from Pittsburgh. As against 474 tickets sold here in May, sales increased to 716 in June, an increase of 33.16 per cent. The increase in revenue from $14,503 in May to $20,889 in June was 44.03 per cent.

Airport charges, based on landing fees, gasoline service levies, etc., increased from $669 in May to $1,425 in June, or 112.75 per cent.

VOLUME "PENALIZED"

In other words, Arnold points out, the airlines are penalized for an increase in their volume of business, being compelled to pay in greater proportion to their earnings.

The subject of rates has been a matter of complaint for more than a year, according to Arnold. He has repeatedly endeavored to enter into negotiations with the airport management and the Commissioners, but his letters have been continually ignored, he said.

The letter threatening to take Pittsburgh off the route was sent as a last resort, according to Arnold. His company, he said, is anxious to continue its service here, but will be forced for economic reasons to abandon the stop if some adjustment is not reached.

CENTRAL MAY MOVE

James A. Condon, president of Central Airlines, disclosed that his company is seriously considering moving its base of operations to Cleveland. The company operates daily mail, passenger and express service between Detroit, Cleveland, Akron, Pittsburgh and Washington. Central Airlines at the present time maintains executive offices, and centers all of its shop and dispatching activities here.

Pennsylvania Airlines, operating passenger and express service between Washington, Akron, Cleveland and Detroit and carrying mail from Detroit to Milwaukee, also makes its headquarters here. C. Bedell Mooro, spokesman for this company, asserted his concern is contemplating a move also.

Only England Gets Results From Silk Hat, Striped Pants

By ARTHUR (BUGS) BAER

Germany has no diplomats and gets into plenty of trouble. France has too many diplomats and gets into more trouble.

So it looks as if the world has fanned out, taking three strikes at a happy medium.

Only England seems to get any results from high silk hats and striped trousers. Think of how much better the world would be if Ambassador Dawes had only learned to wear short pants in London.

England went after its Berlin debt interest like a barber after an ingrown hair. Its success was due to the fact that it had a favorable trade balance.

When England sends a diplomat abroad, it's the start of a career for a statesman. When we send an ambassador abroad, it's the end of a career for a politician.

AWARD PRIZES TO FIREMEN

Fifty-three fire companies from Washington, Westmoreland, Butler and Allegheny counties thronged Swissvale last night to parade as part of the Swissvale volunteer firemen's six-day carnival at the Union Switch and Signal Athletic Field.

The Brackenridge fire department won the coveted prize for the best appearance and North Braddock for the largest company in line. Ingram had the best band, Greentree the best drum and bugle corps, and Sunnyside and Saxonburg were tied for companies coming the longest distance.

Among the judges was John Heinz, Pittsburgh fire chief. Peter McGurk, fire chief of Swissvale, directed the parade.

Chance of Escaping Penalty 2½-to-1, Hearings Show

If you go into Traffic Court for a hearing on a traffic tag, your chances of escaping without a fine are 2½ to 1, according to the results of hearings for the first two days of this week.

A great to-do is being made about the operation of the court. There are charges of inefficiency, charges that Magistrate Charles Papale is over-lenient, charges that experienced workers are being fired for inexperienced political workers.

So perhaps a glimpse at the court's operation may interest you.

The first defendant is a boy of perhaps 19, driving without an operator's license. The car was wrecked. Magistrate Papale fines him $10.

Another driver banged into two parked cars, causing $75 damage. He, too, is fined $10.

Then a Glassport driver is freed when he agrees to repair a fender his car damaged.

A young Negro is arraigned for backing up in Smithfield street shortly before noon traffic. And he didn't have his driver's license with him. He is discharged.

Two motorists who have been in a minor collision are discharged when they settle the damages.

A Negro driver, whose car hit an elderly woman, is freed when testimony indicates he was not at fault.

MAGISTRATE PAPALE ON THE BENCH IN TRAFFIC COURT

Then comes a young driver whose car has struck a child who was confined to the hospital for three days. There were no witnesses against him. He was freed.

A young man delivering a car to a downtown theater is fined $10 for driving without a license and $5 for speeding through a red light.

Another, driving without a license, is fined $10. A driver who passed a parked trolley is assessed the same.

Many Discharged For Tags; Costs Cut in Half

A young man whose car turned over three times sliding down the Sylvan avenue hill is discharged. Magistrate Papale remarks:

"Well, since the damage was only to himself and his car, we'll let him go."

A young woman, driving without a license, is arraigned. The car has struck and slightly injured a 7-year-old boy. She is fined $10.

Two cars have collided. The drivers, a man and a woman, are arraigned. One witness testifies the man seemed to have been drinking. The drivers have settled the damage. Both are discharged.

A driver crosses to the wrong side of the street to drive into an ice cream parlor on Boulevard of the Allies. He hits a truck. The truck is not damaged. A friend in his car is hurt, may lose the sight of an eye. The driver is discharged.

Then comes the tag parade.

All have excuses. One parks overtime because he has to wait for the shoemaker to mend his shoes. Many were detained on last-minute business in 15-minute parking stops. Some of them said they never got tags. Many pleaded poverty in asking for leniency.

In two days 22 with tags were discharged, two were let go when they paid the 50-cent charges for summons, nine were fined.

Ewing LaPorte, state director of the Home Owners Loan Corporation and prominent in Democratic circles, today had been asked to pay Sally Mazer $25,000 damages for a wound the latter received when the LaPorte's pet wire-haired terrier attacked her.

The plaintiff in her suit filed in Common Pleas Court, claims she was attacked by the dog near the home of the LaPorte's at 547 Darlington road, December 11. She claims that as result of the injuries received to her right leg she has been obliged to expend large sums of money and her earning capacity has been impaired.

Patricia Pitt's Sprightly Comment on Pittsburgh's Society Happenings

in Mayfair —With— Patricia Pitt

When inland Pittsburghers want a taste of yachting they must go out of town for it.

And most of the smart set do go in for yachting or sailing a boat of some kind at the various summer resorts along the eastern coast.

Many of the folk in the summer social register after whose names yachts have been listed have relieved themselves of the terrific financial upkeep of a yacht during the depression.

But yachting is coming back.

John P. Hoelzels Return Home

Among yachting enthusiasts are the John P. Hoelzels and their daughters, Elinore and Phyllis. The Hoelzels and their daughters were guests last week of the John W. Hubbards on their yacht, together with the junior John Allen Dillons and John Allen Dillon III, all of New York.

For a week they cruised near New London and Fishers Island. They left Elinore at Bellport, L. I., where she's the house guest of her Dobbs Ferry roommate, Joan Earle, and the remaining members of the Hoelzel family are once more at home.

Elinor finished at Dobbs Ferry in June; her sister Phyllis will return in the fall to Dobbs.

Party Dates For Two Debs Told

It may seem amazing to the uninitiated that debut dates for the Christmas holidays should already be announced, but if holiday dates aren't pre-empted early, there are never any left by autumn.

Another Yuletide deb will be jolly young Peggy Nelson, the John E. Nelsons' daughter. But the exact date hasn't been decided on yet.

Prussia's First Woman Judge To Address Dixie B. P. W.

By MRS. CHARLES M. BREGG

With the northeast regional conference as such recent history (it was held at Bethlehem, N. H., early this month) the attention of Business and Professional Women is turning to the other regional conferences where equally interesting plans will be carried out. To the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains, Blue Ridge, N. C., where two years ago they met for the first time, the B. P. W. of Dixie will go on August 16 to 19, for the southeast regional.

The program committee is headed by the regional chairman, Miss Nettie E. Brogdon, of Greensboro, N. C., and includes the president of the Washington Club and the State Federations of Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. Months ago each member of the committee was asked to canvass her membership for ideas, so there has evolved a challenging program.

Dr. Maria Munk, Berlin's first woman lawyer and Prussia's first woman civil judge, who is president of the German League of Business and Professional Women, is to be one of the speakers. Mrs. Geline MacDonald Bowman, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, as well as several other national officers, will also speak.

Two prizes are being offered—room and meals for one delegate from the state sending the largest percentage of its membership to the conference and one to the State Federation procuring the largest amount of advance publicity concerning the conference in proportion to the number of its clubs.

Unfolds Plans For Adding To Skill

In her talk before the Junior and Senior Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Wilkinsburg last night in the Penn-Lincoln Hotel, Attorney Mary Thompson Denman outlined the purpose and work of the National Federation of B. P. W. Clubs. Since the federation is asking that women have remuneration equal to that paid men for the same work, women must give equal service, she said, and then went on to speak of the federation's health plan by which women may increase their efficiency.

She spoke, too, of the federation's plans for making women more capable, better informed and trained in leadership. At the close of her talk Mrs. Denman presented the juniors with their charter. Miss Frances Frazier, junior president, accepted it.

There was a reception after the dinner and short program. Guests from the Uniontown and Pittsburgh clubs were presented as well as Miss Gertrude Moore, of Greensburg, third district president, and Mrs. James Meyers, of Pittsburgh, district vice president.

Pride has gone before many a fall we trow . . . and this face powder needn't have been so smarty in its big boxes . . . each wearing the French name of Lez —— . . . each being colored the shade of rosy cheeks . . . of sun-tanned skin . . . or peaches-and-cream complexions! For sure look at it!

Sitting on a table . . . as simple and linke-y as the domestic brands . . . and with the price tag of 39c! And there are those same gorgeous shades to dust 'round in! There is the same exquisite scent! We, personally, think that the wisest thing would be to buy 3 boxes at this price . . . blend your own . . . and have enough to last you through many many powdery months!

Some say as how—

Hot tea is the thing to drink in hot weather. And while we don't agree (having tried it, only to spend the following hour like Mrs. Turkish Bath) still . . . we DO see the point in this thing of tea-ing on all occasions.

Especially when you can buy real Chinese tea like this in town for sums that never happened before! Such as 4-ounce boxes at 45c (as are 75c and 80c elsewhere) . . . and such as 8-ounce boxes (as are $1.00.) These all being those "guest" teas of China that have rose petals in them . . . jasmin . . . chloranthus (a strange Oriental flavor) . . . bitter orange . . . orange . . . and just plain black or orange pekoe!

Best of all . . . they come in a silk-brocaded box . . . with a tin box inside that . . . and thirdly, when the tin is opened, there is the precious tea wrapped in rice paper! Dump out the tin, and use the brocaded box as one of the light-o'-loves in your living room! A discovery . . . for a bridge prize . . . a remember-your-hostess gift . . . or just because you like it!

No reason why any female "covering the waterfront" shouldn't have a bathing bag under her arm! Not when they come at 25c! With waterproof linings . . . and nice wild outsides of gaily printed 'calico (least, it LOOKED like calico to us) . . . and nice sturdy straps to swing them by—'round and 'round! Big, too, enough to house all the sun-burn aids and your lipstick!

And yes . . something else again that the well-known water fronts will be covered with! Sailor suits —of which so much has been said that we find ourselves going "ho-hum" with a lack-lustre-look on our face!

Until we gaze upon these at $1.00! Until we leer about them for the Senior Miss! Until we wake up . . and come to . . and realize that 11 to 17-ers have to have THEMSELVES covered as well! And white cotton sailor cloth frocks like those with wrap around skirts and double-breasted middy tops, or jackets going over their "breakaway" frocks (for all the world like the kind we wore in the third grade!) are about the smartest things regardless of how, when, or where you say it! With navy or red buttons! With pockets . . . and lapels on the jackets . . . box pleats in the "breakaways" . . . and plain ones in the skirts!

And now that your eyes are bulging with proper appreciation . . . we say again . . . they're $1.00!

—DOROTHY RANDALL.

Chism, father of the children, is serving a 15-day jail sentence following a fight with Loreda's brother, John Rothlauf.

Balanced City Budget Goal of Treasurer Kirk, Delinquent Tax Collections Exceed Estimates

Lawrence Protege 'Doing Good Job,' McNair Admits

By M. V. BURGESS

The financial condition of the city of Pittsburgh has greatly improved within the last six months.

Collections of delinquent taxes in the city already are $875,000 above the total of $1,350,000 which it was estimated would be realized during the full year from that source.

If the same success attends efforts to get in delinquent taxes during the last half of this year, the city's budget, which has been out of balance about $1,800,000, may be back very nearly in line.

FEAR 'SPENDING SPREE'

That is it may—if the city department heads do not go on a spending spree.

City Treasurer James P. Kirk has pushed the campaign of collections which has brought in the delinquent payments.

Small in stature, and unassuming, Kirk has gone quietly about his business.

He is perhaps the least seen of the McNair department heads.

A protege of Democratic State Chairman David L. Lawrence, Kirk has fallen under the same cloud of disfavor with the Mayor that has enveloped Lawrence. In this cloud, the lightning of rumor has been playing about briskly.

Although the Mayor is opposed to Lawrence and everybody connected with him, he also has referred to Kirk as "doing good work."

MOUNTING DEFICIT

The task which confronted the City Treasurer at the beginning of this year was a perfectly plain but difficult one. For years the city had been piling up a larger deficit.

There was more than $15,000,000 in uncollected delinquent taxes on the city's books. The collection of any substantial part of that sum would go a long way toward curing the city's financial ills.

Near the close of a troubled budget session of City Council, James W. Bamford, of the Building Owners and Managers, said there were big possibilities in energetically going after unpaid taxes.

He suggested that the city adopt some of the methods of private business in collecting accounts.

Council put him on a committee to test out the idea. With him it named Kirk, City Solicitor Cornelius D. Scully, City Controller James P. Kerr, Councilmen William A. Magee and John M. Huston, J. W. Cree, Jr., representing the Denny estate, and James C. Chaplin, banker.

JAMES P. KIRK . . . HE'S COLLECTING THE CITY'S MONEY

'DUNS' TO 1,000

The committee went to work in Treasurer Kirk's office and sent personal letters to 1,000 of the largest tax delinquents.

Many of the taxpayers were interviewed personally and urged to give the city the same consideration as other creditors—at least a partial payment on the debt.

For those who ignored a courteous request for payment from the City Treasurer, there was a snappy communication from the city law department.

Then results began to appear. At the end of June, the city's delinquent collections for six months were $2,225,616, compared with $1,687,432 for the same period last year. Miscellaneous revenue collections, and with current tax collections less than $200,000 behind last year, the revenue side of the picture brightened up.

Business Methods Adopted in Drive To Get Cash

A flag was exposed that the new department heads had been spending money faster than last year, but a check of the controller's records shows that expenditures are slightly less.

PAYDAYS ASSURED

The old bugaboo of possible person paydays for city employes in December seems to be fading rapidly, unless department heads should become extravagant.

The Efficiency and Economy Commission of Pittsburgh has sent almost 100 trained auditors and assistants out to city hall to check up the city's methods. Any waste-losses at this time is almost certain to draw the spotlight.

Kirk before coming into public life was a stenographer in the office of the late Attorney William J. Brennen, for years chairman of the Democratic County Committee. It was largely through Brennen's help that he was appointed on the Registration Commission.

Later he worked for David L. Lawrence's insurance firm, the Harris-Lawrence Company. His education was for the most part received in a business school.

SEIZE STILLS, OWNER HELD

William Cudicully, 52, of Greentree road, Scott Township, was at liberty on $2,500 bond today after being held for court as the alleged operator of two moonshine stills seized in a farmhouse off Greentree road.

County Detective Frank Ritz's keen sense of smell led to the raid yesterday. Ritz entered the farmhouse after detecting the odor of moonshine on the farm, he said. The stills, one a 500-gallon and the other a 100-gallon, were found on the second floor and 100 barrels of mash and 125 gallons of moonshine were discovered in the basement, Ritz said.

Cudicully admitted operating the stills for the last three weeks, saying that the product was sold in the city, according to Ritz. He was taken to the office of Justice of the Peace James McMonigle, of Castle Shannon, and held for violating the liquor laws.

STOCK MARKET PRICES TURN ERRATIC

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—The stock market became somewhat exhausted today after its rather hopeful rally of the previous session and then generally turned irregular following early firmness.

Overnight buying orders failed to lift quotations fractions or a point or more in the first hour. Trading was relatively brisk at one time, when the activity dwindled appreciably and the ticker tape soon resumed its snail-like pace of recent weeks. Heaviness of distillery issues tended to restrain bullish enthusiasm.

Wheat spurted the limit of 5 cents a bushel on the government's crop-report estimating a sharp reduction in actual yields. Corn and rye got up 3 or more cents, but oats and barley were not particularly buoyant. Cotton advanced another dollar or so a bale to around its February highs as weather forecasts were unfavorable. Silver futures developed strength and rubber improved. Bonds edged a bit higher. Foreign exchanges showed only slight variations.

Sentiment in brokerage quarters was optimistic, as a whole but the attitude of various operators was one of caution. In some circles the opinion was expressed that, while the low point of dullness probably has been passed, no great expansion of activity can be expected during the next several weeks.

Selling in the liquor stocks was attributed partly to the government's order extending the period for unlimited importations to October 31, and to the dry vote in Mississippi. Consumer resistance to high prices was also said to have been a factor.

Most equities did not appear to be greatly cheered by the jump in cereals. The thought was advanced, however, that the upturn in grains was due to scarcity rather than increased demand and that higher food costs may tend to reduce public spending power in other categories.

GRAINS ROCKET DAY'S LIMIT

CHICAGO, July 11.—Straining feverishly against arbitrary high price restraints, wheat and corn worked themselves to a standstill late today, reaching a point where all offerings ceased.

Maximum prices that trade rules would tolerate for today were reached and maintained owing to what was generally regarded as the most sensational government crop loss report ever issued from Washington. For a while oats, rye and barley afforded a refuge for traders who were stopped in wheat and corn, but finally every grain on the list was up to the utmost limit possible until tomorrow.

Wheat and all other grains closed strong, wheat up 5 cents; corn, 4 cents, and oats, 3 cents; September new wheat, 93⅝. Provisions closed unchanged to 17 cents higher.

P. R. R. PICK-UP RATES CUT

PHILADELPHIA, July 11.—(AP.)—The Pennsylvania Railroad today announced a reduction of 5 cents a hundred pounds in the minimum rate at which its new collection and delivery service for merchandise freight can be obtained.

The company also announced the cancelation of the minimum collection or delivery charge of 25 cents on the traffic moving to or from connecting lines not providing the service.

Truck pickup and delivery also is extended to cover the consignee on delivery. This, in effect, the company says, provides store-door collection and delivery on a C. O. D. basis.

Cotton Consumption Decline Indicated

NEW YORK, July 11.—The New York Cotton Exchange service estimates the total consumption of all cotton in this country during June was 390,000 bales, as compared with 520,000 bales in May and 698,000 in June, 1933.

Restoring Confidence Important

By B. C. FORBES

RIGHTLY OR wrongly, the fear has spread among businessmen that proponents of the New Deal plan to extend bureaucratic interference with business and industry to a point not yet publicly proclaimed. The New Deal ideal, men of affairs learn, is to extend the arms of government, octopus-like, into every important field of endeavor.

Mr. Forbes

Wherever possible, government money is being injected into all kinds of enterprises—one man who bought a farm tells me that a representative of the government approached him and urged him to let the government take a mortgage, whether he needed the money or not.

Having gained financial entry to a concern, the next step planned by the bureaucrats, 'tis said, is to follow up with systematic attempts to influence the borrowers not only in the running of their affairs, but in their political thinking.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation showed its hand in this direction when it dictated to a Chicago bank that the management must accept a Washington officeholder as president. Circumstances probably made a change in the management urgently necessary. But the incident was interpreted as a straw showing how the wind was likely to blow from Washington as the New Deal spreads its tentacles farther and farther.

ANOTHER WASHINGTON intention, business men have been told, is to bring about the selection of at least one bureaucrat—although that may not be his official designation—to each important directorate in the country, such election to be followed by a demand that all big salaries be drastically cut, to somewhere near the level paid bureaucrats.

"Stuff and nonsense!" you say.

Maybe. Nevertheless, it is a fact that these apprehensions have spread among employers, executives and other men of affairs and that they are having a disturbing influence.

President Roosevelt did vaguely intimate before he departed on his vacation that recovery was largely dependent upon the efforts of business. Perhaps he may learn on his return journey across the continent that need exists for assuring the business and industrial world in positive terms that he recognizes that prosperity cannot be rewon by Washington alone, but must be dependent mainly upon revival of confidence among fillers of pay envelopes.

Restore such confidence and America should astound the world by its recuperative powers. "You cannot keep a good man down for long." Nor a good country. And America is a good country, a superlatively good country.

PRESIDENT H. J. KLINGLER, of Pontiac, tells me that net profits of dealers during the first third of this year have run more than three times the volume of last year.

MORE NATIONAL BANKS OPEN

WASHINGTON, July 11.—(AP.)—J. F. T. O'Connor, the Comptroller of the Currency, announced today that 40 national banks with frozen deposits of $33,777,000 were licensed and opened or reopened in June.

His statement said this brought the number of national banks licensed during the first six months of 1934 to 313, involving a total of $289,816,000 in frozen assets. The statement continued:

"As a result of the activity by the Comptroller's department last month, the number of unlicensed banks in the United States had been reduced to 95 at the close of business June 30, 1934.

"This figure represents only 6.7 per cent of the 1,417 national banks which were unlicensed on March 16, 1933, the day following the termination of last year's general banking holiday."

N. Y. Central, P. R. R. Loadings Decline

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—New York Central Railroad Company reports total freight loadings of 80,372 for the week ended July 7, which included Independence Day, against 99,167 in the previous week and 90,697 in the corresponding period last year.

During the week ended July 7 the Pennsylvania System handled a total of 89,986 revenue cars, as compared with 96,901 in the week immediately preceding and 89,286 in the similar period in 1933.

Glidden Wins Suit On Alcohol Taxes

NEW YORK CURB MARKET

PUBLIC WORKS, AUTOS AID STEEL

NEW YORK, July 11—Iron Age says:

"According to general expectations, public works projects and the automotive industry are proving to be the chief supports of the steel trade in the first normal week of the summer quarter. While steel producers are building up their own inventories in some instances, the above consuming groups together with the railroads are largely responsible for an increase of 6 points, or nearly 20 per cent in steel output this week, bringing the ingot production rate for the industry to 37 per cent of capacity.

"Even though new structural projects call for only 7,500 tons this week, considerable additional public works tonnage is expected to come out as a result of recent allocation of federal funds by the PWA.

"Yearly estimates of July automobile production are unusually favorable, output being estimated at as high as 280,000 units. Price reductions resulted in much heavier June sales than had been anticipated, and automobile executives are hopeful that the present buying wave may extend into August.

"The effects of recent steel price reductions, most of which become effective this week, are not yet discernible.

"Affected by reduced quotations on bars, plates, shapes, sheets and hot-rolled strip, the Iron Age composite price for finished steel has declined to 2.131 cents a pound from 2.199 cents, where it had remained since April 24. At that time it was advanced $3.82 a ton from 2.056 cents a pound. The pig iron composite price is unchanged at $17.90 a gross ton, but the scrap composite has declined to $10.58 a ton, the lowest level of the year."

20-Year Mortgage Term New Government Hope

(Editor's Note—The way has been cleared for more than three thousand million dollars to be spent on houses by the signing of the National Housing Act. The following article is the last of a series in which the Sun-Telegraph surveys the significance of this act.)

By JAMES A. BAUBIE

Before 1929 everything was rosy with John Jones. He had a job that paid $50 a week. He was buying his own $6,000 home.

He had 10 years in which to pay off the $4,000 mortgage. He figured he could do it with about $70 a month.

Then came the depression. Jones' salary started to slide. It kept sliding until it hovered around $35 in July, 1934.

It was just all that Mr. Jones could do to meet those mortgage payments. In fact, he had to let the principal "slide" during the last few months.

He still owed something like $2,400. It looked hopeless. If he could only cut those payments in half, but the mortgage concern couldn't see it.

Then the President signed the National Housing Act, and Mr. Jones took one hopeful breath.

What will the Federal Housing Administration, set up by the act, do for him?

There are nearly 14,000,000 John Joneses in this country, home owners who have been under a continuous fear of foreclosure.

HOUSING ACT AIDS

The government has written a lot of things into the Housing Act with John Jones in mind.

First, it provides for establishment of National Mortgage Associations which are substantially a system of federal mortgage discount corporations.

Second, by setting up a mutual insurance fund, the government provides for the insuring of one thousand million dollars' worth of old mortgages.

Third, the Home Loan Bank Act has been liberalized to a considerable degree to make loans to members of the Federal Home Loan Banks on the security of home mortgages.

Fourth, the Federal Reserve Act has been amended so that the present five-year limit on real estate loans by national banks no longer is in force, if the loans are insured.

Fifth, borrowing power of the Home Owners Loan Corporation is increased from two billion to three billion dollars.

Any group of five or more men with at least $5,000,000 can organize a National Mortgage Association and will be permitted to issue bonds and obligations ten times the aggregate par value of their stock.

Such associations will then discount short-term mortgages and turn them into 20-year obligations with interest rates between 5 and 6 per cent, with the provision that government insurance on such mortgages is limited to 60 per cent of the appraisal value of the property.

EXTEND MORTGAGES

John Jones will take his troubles to his mortgage concern and ask that his payments be spread over an additional 10 years. As Mr. Jones' unpaid balance is well below 60 per cent of the value of his house and lot, his mortgage concern will be able to sell his mortgage to a national mortgage association, get its money in cash and then be able to reinvest it in another mortgage.

WILL LENDERS GO ALONG?

Of course, this is all on the assumption that lending agencies avail themselves of the governmental insurance and that private capital can be induced to invest in the National Mortgage Associations.

Besides the 14,000,000 Joneses, there are 10,000,000 investors in building and loan associations who will be afforded mental and financial relief by the Housing Act.

There are 300 building and loans in Allegheny County, with millions of dollars in assets, but membership in these associations throughout the nation dropped from 12,336,754 in 1930 to 10,102,258 in 1932.

The Housing Act paves the way for insuring building and loan depositors up to $5,000 each, along lines similar to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

A Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation is set up with $100,000,000 capital, the fund to be made self-sustaining by regular insurance premiums paid to the government by the participating building and loan associations.

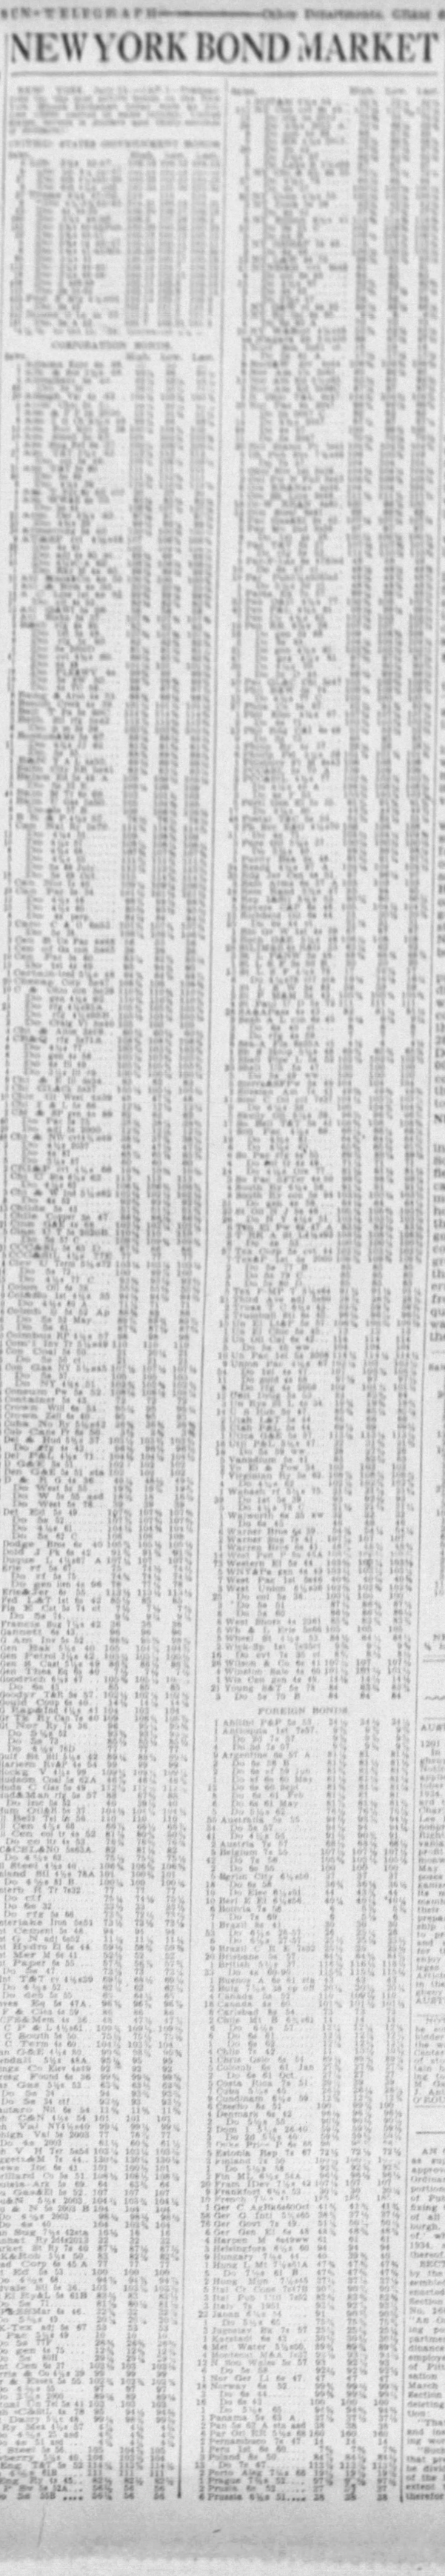
All of the improvements referred to in this series of articles are not going to happen over night.

It may take months to launch even the home-colonization movement here, according to informed persons, but there is a general confidence in most business circles that the home owner is going to be better off when the complete machinery gets in motion.

It is expected to produce far-reaching results in the re-organization of the mortgage structure of the nation along lines of longer-term loans and lower interest rates.

And it aims to do this largely with private capital.

NEW YORK BOND MARKET



NEW DEALERS HEAR ABOUT VIOLATORS

By LEWIS HANEY

Professor of Economics, N. Y. University

NEW YORK, July 11.—Senator Borah has been attacking the element of monopoly and price-fixing which has thrived under NRA. In this he does well. The only question is, why were these things not foreseen and objected to in advance?

An administration spokesman, Senator Lewis replies that it is now found that certain business men have "violated" their codes by joining together to fix prices, "even as against the government itself." He says they will be prosecuted.

But why should the New Dealers be "finding out" all this at such a late date? They deliberately suspended the anti-trust laws in the case of code members, and they openly approved many codes which contained various price-fixing arrangements.

A child would know that this would lead to undesirable monopolistic results.

One great trouble with the New Dealers is tht they will not learn from past experience, or accept established economic law. They insist on "experimenting." The only way they know to learn that a fire is hot is to burn their fingers.

SEE FAILURE

Evidently we are now witnessing the failure of another of their "experiments." Certainly they are crawfishing out of price-fixing under the codes.

On June 7, General Johnson issued an edict that no new codes were to contain price-fixing agreements, and that existing arrangements of this sort would be revised.

It was being "found" that prices were marked up faster than consumer purchasing power, so that farmers and laborers gained little or no general benefit from the schemes to give them more money. High prices were a serious drag on the building industries. (The government itself forced down steel rail prices for the railways.) Now lumber code prices have been cut.

High prices also stimulated production and made curtailment difficult. This has brought trouble with "hot oil" and non-Blue Eagle copper. We now "find out" that the cotton acreage is at least 28,000,000, although the New Dealers tried to reduce it to 25,000,000. They have failed because cotton is so high in price that the farmers are strongly tempted to raise more.

NEED COMPETITION

Business men, too, have run into difficulties with price-fixing. Some complain of the lack of flexibility, which means that they cannot change prices quickly to meet new conditions. Above all, however, I would stress the fact that if price-fixing is allowed, government control is sure to come. Business leaders made a great mistake when they fancied that they could retain "self-government" if they were exempted from the anti-trust laws. The quicker they learn that if they want to run their own businesses they must compete, the better.

FLORIDA RACER ENTERS SUN-TELEGRAPH REGATTA

SPORTS COMMENT BY HARRY KECK

Pirates Face Test On Eastern Trip. Rooney Takes Gamble

With Early Opening. Pittsburgh Virgin Field For Speed Boating.

"We're due for a good Eastern trip. We haven't had one in several seasons, you know, and if we can get a break from the law of averages this time we will find ourselves in a good position to make a dash to the wire."

Pie Traynor

The speaker was Pie Traynor, new manager of the Pirates. He was speculating on the prospects of his club just before the close of the most recent home stay.

Aside from playing the percentage angle in the East, Traynor is banking on his pitching staff pulling itself together and establishing itself on a firm underfooting. He was hoping Waite Hoyt, who has been doing such fine relief work, would be able to come through in a starting role against the Cubs in Chicago. Hoyt failed him, but he is such a good all-round mound veteran that he is liable to click the next time out.

"Just let our pitchers get back their confidence and the team will pick up with them," quoth Pie, who is the soul of optimism. "This Eastern trip is our big chance and we intend to make the most of it."

The invasion of the East begins today, with a four-game series against the Giants in New York, including a doubleheader tomorrow. Five games in Boston and four each in Brooklyn and Philadelphia follow. That makes a stretch of 17 games in a row on the trip which holds the fate of the Buccaneer crew. It's a tough siege, and, as Traynor says, it will mark the making or breaking of the local team's pennant hopes.

PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL PLANS

Art Rooney is taking a big gamble on opening the National Professional Football League season in Pittsburgh as early as September 9, and no one realizes it any more than he does. The baseball season, including the world series, will have a full month to run at that stage and the minds of the sports followers will be on the flag races, while golf and tennis and other summer sports still will be with us.

The football fan really does not get down to taking his sport seriously until October comes around and even then not until the world series is out of the way. By that time the football Pirates will have completed one-third of their schedule, which certainly is rushing the season more than a little.

Rooney's schedule calls for his team to play an even dozen games, six at home and six away. The Cincinnati Reds will be the opening attraction in a Sunday game. The following Sunday, September 16, the Boston Braves will be here. Philadelphia shows here in a night game on September 26 and on October 3 and 10, respectively, the New York Giants and Chicago Bears, the National champions, will play at Forbes Field. The final game at home, unless some exhibition games are carded, will be on October 18, with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

ART ROONEY CONFIDENT OF FUTURE

Rooney is looking to the future with a great deal of confidence. He says the annual meeting of the league, held in New York recently, was one of the most enthusiastic he ever attended. Tim Mara, owner of the New York franchise, said he would not part with his club for $200,000, and George Marshall's Boston franchise is not for sale at any price. The Pittsburgh franchise, purchased last year, has increased greatly in value and represents a good investment. Rooney lost money in introducing the professional sport here last fall, but he is hopeful of getting it back with dividends.

Art Rooney

One reason for the confidence of Rooney is the manner in which the fans went for the new brand of the sport last fall. Another is that he expects to have a much stronger club this year, with Luby DiMeolo, former Pitt captain and more recently line coach at New York University, as his head coach. He plans to make many changes in the personnel of his club, retaining only a handful of last year's stars and building the team around Angel Brovelli, who figures to be a better back this year after a season's experience in the big show; Oehler, Tesser, Sortet and Douds.

Rooney originally planned to play all of his home games on Sundays, with the legalization of Sunday football in Pennsylvania, but the night games last year proved so popular that he has scheduled half of the home card for nocturnal play.

SPEEDBOATING NEW SPORT HERE

That Pittsburgh is virgin territory for the motorboating craze is evident from the entry list compiled for the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph-Oakmont Boat Club speed boat regatta to be held at Oakmont next Saturday and Sunday. The sport has been neglected here so long that there are comparatively few drivers and boats in this vicinity and it took the exceptionally generous prize list posted for the races to lure the best drivers from all parts of the country here to make up a starting field of national prominence, including current and former champions. Few of the really big names of the sport are missing. With upwards of 100 entries assured by post time, only a handful of the drivers will be local or district representatives.

Chart Johnson

Speed boat drivers are much like automobile racers. They make a business of their sport, whether they be amateurs or professionals, and the topnotchers miss very few meets where the prizes are adequate. They put up with many hardships in their quest for cash and trophies and travel hundreds and even thousands of miles to compete. Most of them transport their craft on trailers attached to automobiles and complete a large circuit during the racing season.

With so many of the stars entered, the Oakmont meet, one of a series sponsored by William Randolph Hearst and his newspapers, promises to be one of the most thrilling of the year, and it is planned to make it an annual event. When a regatta includes such names as Jim Nunnelly, former intercollegiate and national amateur champion; George H. (Chart) Johnson, winner of the Albany-to-New York Hudson River marathon; Jim Rogers, present Class F professional champion; Sam Crooks, Paul Hyatt, Morton Mandell, Arrell Reinking, Cab Walier, Johnny Edgar, Fred C. Weissell, Jr., and a few others who might be mentioned, it truly can boast of presenting a more or less Who's Who of the racing sport.

HUBBELL HERO OF ALL-STAR CLASSIC

NEW YORK, July 11.—(AP.)—Back in the trenches for pennant warfare today, after giving nearly 50,000 howling fans the greatest combined one-day baseball and vaudeville show in the history of the sport, American Leaguers ran thank their lucky stars that Carl Owen Hubbell, the Oklahoma master of the screw ball and ace of National League pitchers, hurled no more than three of the nine spectacular innings in the now historic battle of the Polo Grounds.

Hubbell's dazzling performance in blanking the Americans for the first three frames and striking out five of the game's greatest batsmen in succession—Ruth, Gehrig, Foxx, Simmons and Cronin—absolutely stole the second annual all-star show yesterday.

HUBBELL BRILLIANT

This highly dramatic achievement in the full glare of the spotlight not only set Hubbell apart for the day as the star of stars, but thoroughly overshadowed the subsequent proceedings, during which the Americans wiped out a four-run deficit by shellacking Lon Warnecke and Van Mungo, took the lead with a six-run outburst in the fifth inning and then coasted to a 9-to-7 triumph over the Nationals behind the effective relief pitching of young Melvin Harder, of Omaha, Neb., and the Cleveland Indians. Harder held the Nationals to one hit in the last five innings.

It was the second successive triumph for the Americans in this brilliant mid-season pageantry, with Al Simmons and Earl Averill taking the clouting honors that went to Ruth a year ago in the first game at Chicago, but they are still wondering whether King Carl uses bird-shot or baseballs when he steps out to pitch against American League rivals. Hubbell's record of mastery now over opposition from the junior circuit comprises one of baseball's most remarkable pitching chapters.

For two innings of last year's all-star affair, Hubbell blanked the Americans. Unfortunately for the Nationals, the lanky southpaw was unable to work any longer, due to the fact he had been obliged to go 18 innings to beat the Cardinals, 1-0, a few days beforehand. Against the Washington Senators in the last world series Hubbell did not yield an earned run in 20 innings as he pitched two thrilling victories over the American League champions.

He capped the climax yester-

DORMONT SET FOR CLIMB

Eager to make a showing in the second half campaign in the City League, Dormont, tied in the percentage column with the champion Book nine, awaits the invasion of the Homewood tossers this evening, determined to keep in step with the Books. In the second game in the league, the Vaughans meet Parmelee at Frick Park.

Dormont suffered heavily during the first half with players leaving for minor league berths. Eight men upon whom Managers Falconer and Fuchs had banked heavily left for minor league baseball.

South Hills and New Kensington clash this evening at Parnassus field in the first game of the series to decide the Allegheny County Legion championship.

The Books added a game to its total by beating Immaculate Heart last evening at West Penn Park, winning 6 to 2, although being outhit, 10 to 7. Homewood had an easy time with Mt. Oliver, walloping the Business Men, 11 to 0, as Studnicki and Bruce turned in a three-hit masterpiece.

Parmelee nosed out the Vaughans on the North Side, 6 to 5, pushing over a run in the eighth to clinch the game.

The Pittsburgh Crawfords of the National Negro League dropped a close one to the Philadelphia Stars in Philadelphia, bowing 4 to 3.

STRICT RIVER REGULATIONS FOR MEET

By HARRY KECK,
Sports Editor.

Here comes Florida!

From that faraway state in the Southland will arrive a driver to compete for honors with the premier racers of the land in the gigantic outboard motorboat regatta of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph and the Oakmont Boat Club for the William Randolph Hearst Gold Cup and other valuable prizes on the Allegheny River at Oakmont Saturday and Sunday afternoons.

Cal Melson, of Orlando, is the Floridan. He will race in the professional B, C and F classes.

From Westfield, Mass., comes the entry of Leslie Slater in the professional Class A event.

ELEVEN STATES ENTERED

Other new entries are those of Frank Schaub, Hamilton, O., professional C and F; Maryland Codd, Towson, Md., Class A professional, and Edward Thomas, Toledo, amateur C and F classes.

Eleven far-flung states and the District of Columbia now have entrants in the event, which will see more than 100 drivers go to the post in the two days' carnival of 16 five-mile races around the mile-and-a-quarter oval course.

Arrangements were completed yesterday for federal control of the river at the racing scene under the jurisdiction of the Customs collector's office. U. S. Customs Collector James Houlahen is co-operating fully to make the course safe for both drivers and spectators, and his forces will tie in with the Department of Engineers of the War Department, under Major W. D. Styer, state and highway and county police and borough officials in policing the river and land.

REGULATIONS STRICT

The arrangements of the Customs office will be in charge of C. W. Strickler, marine manager, who will be aboard the Customs boat, the Monongahela, flying the department's ensign. Occupants of any pleasure craft or barges which do not heed the commands of the Monongahela will be liable to arrest and fine. A $500 fine will be levied on pleasure craft owners and $250 on barge owners who infringe upon the racing course or in any other way violate the federal regulations. The County Commissioners yesterday assigned County Police to aid in the patrol work.

Announcement was made today that Rees Hopkins has been assigned as official clockman for the regatta, with Huber Brady and James Patterson in charge of the summary of results. John H. Winchester has been added to the general committee.

So great has been the demand for seats at the course that a group of Oakmont business men is constructing several thousands of them on a plot of ground adjoining the Oakmont Boat Club property. These seats will be sold to spectators to pay the cost, but the Sun-Telegraph is not identified with the venture. So far as the Sun-Telegraph is concerned this meet is absolutely free to the public. There is plenty of room on the river bank on both sides of the river for spectators to view the races free.

DRIVERS DUE TOMORROW

Drivers will begin to arrive in Pittsburgh tomorrow to try out the course in advance of the races. C. F. Chapman, secretary of the National Racing Commission, will be on hand Friday morning to serve as honorary referee and will be accompanied by A. A. Duryea, of New York, who will act as advisor to John J. Hetrick, chief measurer, in his important duties.

Montgomery Joins Brooklyn Dodgers

Cliff Montgomery, of Natrona Heights, captain and star quarterback of the Columbia football team of last fall, has decided to cast his lot in the pro ranks with the Brooklyn Dodgers. He announced yesterday that he'd signed with Shipwreck Kelly's team.

The Pittsburgh Pirates made several unsuccessful efforts to induce Cliff to sign with them, and other National Professional League clubs also have been after his services.

ROYSTON LEADS IN STATE AMATEUR GOLF QUALIFYING TEST

HIGHLAND STAR MATCHES PAR WITH 72

By TOM BIRKS

Braving a teeming downpour of rain and a stiff breeze, Joseph R. Royston, long-hitting star from the Highland Country Club, turned in a brilliant par 72 to lead the early finishers in the qualifying round of the Pennsylvania state amateur golf tournament over the links of the Fox Chapel Golf Club today.

Royston, who has been knocking at the championship door over a period of years, had an excellent chance to break par. He came to the eighteenth green needing a par 5 for a 71. On the edge of the green in two shots, he missed his short chip, taking a 6. This was his only mistake in a perfect round, played under bad conditions.

McCLURE SECOND

This apparently is going to be a tournament for the long hitters. Wright McClure, of the Chartiers Heights Country Club, turned in a 76 to gain a temporary hold on second place. Three shots over par on the outgoing nine, he came home in 36, one over par, three-putting the last green.

Knox Young, West Penn amateur chacmpion from the Shannopin Country Club, could not get started. Despite the fact that he was playing with Royston, Knox took a big 81, which may or may not get him into the championship division.

PHILADELPHIANS DELAYED

Many of the Philadelphia entrants, traveling by rail, arrived at the scene of the tourney some three hours late. Their train was held up by engine trouble. It appeared that they would be hurried to complete the test before evening.

Thre was quite a little jockeying around among the players for the team championship. Billy Marks, Jim Marks, Jr., Sid Carson, Jr., and Ed McLeod, of Washington, Pa., deciding to represent Kiski. Fox Chapel Jar and the cards of the leaders:

When the National Public Links championship tourney gets under way here the week of July 30, the old guard of Schenley Park will be very much in the limelight. Yesterday, in the 36-hole qualifying round over the South Park course, players from the Schenley links landed four out of the five places allotted to this district. Only Alex Shacoski, North Park champion, was able to break into the select circle.

The four players from Schenley were Jerome Rosenberg, Carl Kauffmann, Andy Szwedko and Mike Galido. They had a terrific battle on their hands before they drew the ticket.

ROSENBERG MEDALIST

Rosenberg was the medalist with a 74-77—151. Shacoski had a 73-81—154. Kaufmann finished with 77-77—154 and Galido kicked in with a 79-76—155 and Szwedko 74-80—154.

Kaufmann naturally was the center of attraction. The large gallery was pulling for the Schenley veteran to qualify and win a chance at his fourth national title. Carl gave his supporters some hectic moments before that score was posted.

Shacoski putted his way into the leading five. After leading the parade in the morning with a fine 73, one over par, he landed on the thirty-first green in the afternoon one over the regulation figures. From the thirteenth to the home green it must have been a nightmare for Shacoski, his score mounting as high as a kite.

MISS KUHN VICTOR

Mary Kuhn, Pittsburgh Field Club star, won the Women's Golf Association two-day, 36-hole medal play tournament at the Field Club yesterday with a gross 171. Miss Kuhn also won the low net prize with a net 161.

Betty Abernethy, of Oakmont, was awarded low gross prize with a 176.

In the daily prizes for low gross, Mrs. S. F. Wadsworth won on Monday, and Mrs. L. G. Riley, of Edgewood, yesterday.

The Churchill Valley Golf Club has arranged one-day tournaments for men and women to assist in raising funds to defray the expenses of staging the National public links tourney at South Park. A kickers hadicap for women is to be staged from 9 a. m. until noon on Thursday, July 25, and a medal play tourney for men, under full club handicap, will be staged from noon until evening of the same day. Trophies are to be awarded the winners in each event. There is to be an entrance fee of $1, but no green fee. Starting times can be arranged by calling Churchill 6400 on July 24 or 25.

NEW YORK, July 11.—The all-star game now a matter of pleasant memory, the National League clubs are ready to make the Atlantic seaboard reverberate with championship action over a period of more than two weeks.

Bill Terry's Giants and Pie Traynor's Pirates are set to do their stuff at the Polo Grounds in a four-game series which gets under way this afternoon with a single contest. The league leaders and Braves will stage a dual bill tomorrow.

The Pittsburgh players came over from the home part last night and were greeted here by their manager, Arky Vaughan and Paul Waner, all of whom played active parts in the spectacle of yesterday.

BIRKOFER READY

Manager Traynor is likely to throw Ralph Birkofer at the Giants this afternoon. On the last invasion of the Pirates into the Yale of Coogan's Bluff the sturdy southpaw went to the mat with Carl Hubbel in a 1-0 duel, which was chalked against the Pittsburghers.

Memphis Bill Terry has Hal Schumacher available for sub duty, so Hal is likely to match his offerings against the lefthand shoots of Birkofer. Provided both youngsters are in form the opener should be a real fight.

The Corsairs face a test of 17 games in the East as they wend their way from New York to Boston, then to Brooklyn and Philadelphia. Five contests are carded at the New England metropolis.

LINDSTROM BACK

Fred Lindstrom was in the Pirate party that landed here today. Lindy's injured hand appears to be on the mend and he may be able to swing into action against his old-time buddies.

The Pirates are seven and one-half games below the pacesetting Giants as the series gets under way, yet their position is not as bad as it would seem. The Buccos have only five more defeats than the number charged against the Giants. A spurt on the part of the Traynor entry will accomplish a lot.

HUBBELL HERO OF CLASSIC

day with his gaudiest display of skill, just when it appeared the Americans might break the left-handed spell he has held over them. Charley Gehringer lashed a single past Frankie Frisch and raced to second on Wally Berger's misplay. Heinie Manush walked, but Hubbell with the stage setting entirely to his liking, then proceeded to strike out Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Jimmy Foxx in succession.

Simmons and Cronin also fell victims of Hubbell's sorcery at the outset of the second inning. The southpaw had them both missing so badly that they looked ridiculous and were compelled to join in the laughter at their own expense.

Hubbell collected no more strikeouts in the third. He walked Ruth, but retired the side quickly, and when he raced to the clubhouse, with an ovation ringing in his ears, he left the Nationals riding the crest on a four-run lead, gained at the expense of Gomez and thanks to a brace of home runs by Cardinal stars, Frisch and Joe Medwick.

The Americans manifest their appreciation for Hubbell's grand exit by climbing all over the right-hand pitching of Warneke and Mungo.

SCORE IS TIED

Two down, the Americans turned on full power in the fifth and quickly sewed up the game. With the bases full, Charley Ruffing, who had relieved Gomez, belted a single to left, tallying two more runners—the last one, incidentally, proving to be the winning score.

The Nationals had their last big chance in their own half of the fifth when they drove Ruffing from the box. Harder, who was an arbitrary choice for the all-star staff by Cronin on the advice of his old teammate, Walter Johnson, stepped into a ticklish spot and promptly squelched a fresh brigade of National League sluggers.

It was a battle of shortstops in the eighth and ninth. After Cronin had made two dazzling stops in the last half of the eighth, Arky Vaughan, of the Pirates, raced far to his right to make a gorgeous catch of Averill's short fly in the ninth. Vaughan's catch was the fielding feature of the game.

Although officials of the Giants said the game was a sellout, with the gates closed before game time and upwards of 10,000 fans turned away, the official figures showed 48,363 cash customers as compared with a seating capacity of 53,602 for the Polo Grounds. The net receipts were $52,982, of which about $40,000 will go to the ball players' benevolent fund. The totals were slightly in excess of those for the first all-star game at Chicago last year. It will be the American League's turn to stage the 1935 all-star show and the rivalry in bidding for it already is keen between Detroit and Boston.

TOURNEY ENTRY TOTALS 82

By PAUL G. SULLIVAN

A grand total of 82 entries impose in the custody of the committee in charge of the annual Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, Pittsburgh Parks tennis championships with inauguration of hostilities just six days away. Thirty-eight names were added to the roster yesterday so that, with three days' mail still to be inspected, there is excellent reason to hope that the ultimate field will number in the neighborhood of 100.

Strangely enough, of the entire enrollment to date only seven performers are women. Still more remarkable is the fact that five of this feminine sqiete are enlisted from West Park, the remaining pair being from Frick and South, which means that there is not a contestant aligned from North, Highland, Olympia, and Schenley in the ladies' group. Unless this division takes a special brace between now and the deadline on the filing of names, it is quite likely that a consolidation of several ballwicks will be effected in order to allow more spirited competition in contests preliminary to the inter-park eliminations series wherein the individual park winners are slated to tangle for city honors on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 26, 27 and 28.

West and South Parks are deadlocked for the men's singles entrance lead with 13 contenders apiece. Frick is third with an even dozen, Schenley boasts 11, North and Highland have 10 each, and Olympia trails with but six.

A flock of able performers were found among the Tuesday catch. West Park was particularly fortunate in landing four outstanding title possibilities, including Bill Blum, veteran driver, who has been right up there tooling in just about every municipal court event since the tourney became a local fixture.

Meanwhile the Solow trio, Eugene, Irvin and Norman, well known to tennis devotees at Taylor Allderdice High School and Pitt, cast lot with Schenley and George Sobel, perennial threat, and Jack Rosen, always a tough customer to trim, lined up at Frick.

Prospective contestants are reminded that there will be no jousting at Riverview Park in the impending conclave, arrangements having been made to care for upper North Side luminaries on the more commodious net layout at North Park.

The entry lists are slated to close Friday night in both men's and women's singles. The various individual park draws will be made almost immediately and playing schedules will be published as soon thereafter as possible and in ample time for all competitors to make proper plans for appearing promptly for initial matches. Actual combat will get under way Tuesday afternoon and every effort will be made to push the tournaments in the individual parks to conclusion by Saturday, July 21.

Winners and runners-up in both the Inter-Park eliminations and the individual park meetings will be awarded handsome permanent prizes by the Sun-Telegraph. In addition, the City champions will capture the first legs on the brand new Sun-Telegraph Challenge Trophies and will also grab off trips at Pittsburgh delegates and Sun-Telegraph guests to the National Public Parks championships at Minneapolis from August 13 to 19.

Honus Says:

By HONUS WAGNER,
Former Star, Now Coach of Pirates.

To the Sports Editor:

I was talking to one of the boys on a team that hasn't done so well this year and he seemed kind of peeved on. "What have you got to be peeved up about?" I asked. "We're going places," he said. "Where?" I asked. "Oh, maybe next year or the year after that. What's the hurry?" That's the spirit. The good old Chinese method of looking at life. Those old fellows reckon life by the thousand years. They were big and important before our civilization began. Just be patient, and do your best while you live day by day, and eventually you'll land on top.

Regards,
HONUS WAGNER.

In other senior division games, the Kirby Transfer softballers oppose the C. J. Wahls in Bracket II at Wilson Park; the undefeated Campbell Box Lunch tossers clash with Homewood Playgrounds in Bracket III on Peabody High School field, and Overbrook plays Fort Black Community on the latter's grounds in Bracket V.

Goodwill invades Glenfield to play the Glenfield A. A. team in a Bracket II game of the senior division. Glenfield is still undefeated in its Bracket. Red Merriman is Manager Clyde White's selection to face Goodwill. Red has fanned 474 batters in 28 games.

Oscar Richardson started the rally in the seventh inning that paved the way for the Travelers Insurance team's 9-5 victory over the Federal Reserve Bankers in a Bracket I game on the Schenley Oval Field yesterday. He collected two hits in the big inning in which the Insurance tossers tallied eight runs. E. E. Wyatt, 55-year-old first baseman of the winners, played a great game. Peter Ostronich also played well. Julius Shapiro hit a home run for the Insurance aggregation. This was the fourth straight triumph for the Travelers in Bracket I.

Pair Deadlocked In Western Amateur

OKLAHOMA CITY, July 11.—(AP.)—Two Oklahoma City youths, Zell Eaton and Bob Conliff, Jr., set the pace with 72s, two over par, on the first 18 holes of the 36-hole qualifying test for the western amateur golf tournament at the Twin Hills Golf Club, here, yesterday.

Eaton, medalist last year in the Western, trans-Mississippi and Oklahoma amateur tournaments, put together 37 and par 35, coming in with three successive birdies on the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth holes, and Conliff added a sub-par 34 to an indifferent 38 going out.

Par successfully withstood the attacks of the entire field of approximately 170.

NET DOUBLES STARS WIN

Quarter-final and second round competition comprises this evening's abbreviated bill of competition in the third annual Fox Chapel Golf Club invitation men's doubles turf court net tournament. Tilts in the bracket of eight promise spirited action as Dr. Dave and Dr. John O'Loughlin, P. A. A. aces and district dual champions, tackle the Stanton pair, Neal Rumsey and E. A. Knoche, and the hard-hitting Mount Lebanon combine of Eddie Alcorn and Russ Unger engage the even flashier, if less consistent, young array of Bobby Grier and Joe Madden. Other skirmishes promise similarly torrid exchanges.

Yesterday's milling once more beheld prevalence of the dope. Madden and Grier downed the veteran outfit of Frank White and J. J. Lincoln, Jr., 6-4, 3-6, 6-3, in the lone extra-setter of the session and the only affair savoring of an upset. Unger and Alcorn proved too potent at the net for the essentially baseline coalition of Frank Smith and Bill Clardy, who went under at 6-3, 6-1. Rumsey and Knoche were pushed hard by their Stanton mates, Vin Glidden and Carlton Hughes, but came through on steadiness, 10-8, 6-2. The summary:

FIRST ROUND

Lower half—King Moore and Malcolm Hay defeated John R. Brown and Crosby Leyda, 6-1, 6-0.

SECOND ROUND

Upper half—Dr. David L. O'Loughlin and Dr. John L. O'Loughlin defeated Austin Famaries and John H. Miller, Jr., 6-1, 6-2; Neal O. Rumsey and E. A. Knoche defeated Carlton E. Hughes and V. K. Glidden, 10-8, 6-2; Robert T. Lampon and Paul Barber defeated T. Howe Nimick and J. F. Hillman, 6-1, 6-1.

Lower half—W. Russell Ufger and Edgar Alcorn defeated Frank S. Smith and William J. Clardy, 6-3, 6-1; Joseph Madden and Robert Grier defeated Frank White and J. J. Lincoln, Jr., 6-4, 3-6, 6-3; William L. O'Loughlin and Paul G. Sullivan defeated King Moore and Malcolm Hay, 6-8, 6-3.

Co-Chairman Bob Grier of the annual Western Pennsylvania junior and boys' net championships reminds belated entrants that the lists close in both divisions on Saturday at noon. Grier may be telephoned during the day at Atlantic 1375 or in the evening at Lehigh 5863-J. His address is 146 Woodhaven drive, Mount Lebanon.

Syracuse Race Betting Banned

ALBANY, N. Y., July 11.—(INS.)—The option mutuel betting at the running races on the State Fair Grounds at Syracuse is a violation of the penal law, Attorney General John J. Bennett, Jr., ruled today.

In a formal communication to Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman of the New York State Racing Commission, Bennett wrote:

"It is my opinion that the 'option' system of betting under consideration violates the provisions of Section 986 of the penal law, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to engage in pool selling."

GREYS REMAIN IN LEAD

Two days in the second half pennant drive in the Mid-Atlantic League have removed all but Zanesville and Dayton from the top of the heap.

Huntington and Beckley have yet to register in the standings. Their scheduled game last night was postponed because of rain.

Roged Wolff fanned 10 Wheeling batters and allowed only six hits to lead the Dayton Ducks to an easy 10-3 victory.

It was a costly victory, however, for the Ducks lost the services of Catcher Walter Millies, who injured his ankle sliding into third base in the sixth inning.

Hard hitting and fast fielding enabled Springfield to defeat Johnstown, 5-1. Zanesville stayed at the top by defeating Charleston, 5-0.

Greensburg's Trojans, apparently determined to force all issues in the second half race in the Penn State Association, won another ball game yesterday, defeating McKeesport, 6 to 2. Four errors contributed no little to the downfall of the Little Bucs.

Washington had little trouble in whipping Charleroi, winning 7 to 1, and Jeannette slugged out a 14 to 5 victory over Monessen.

Yankee Captures Yacht Cup Test

NEWPORT, R. I., July 11.—(AP.)—Yankee, Boston's aspirant for the honor of defending the America's cup, yesterday soundly trounced Rainbow, Harold S. Vanderbilt's newly constructed candidate, leading her around a 28½-miles triangle by 5 minutes and 27 seconds.

It was the second time in the trial series that Yankee met Rainbow, and on each occasion the Vanderbilt craft finished in her wake.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Susan reminded her that they did not know how to get in touch with her father. "And John's had barely time to get to Omaha," she said. "So long as there's a chance of Uncle Worthy getting better we ought not to call John away from his job. It means everything to him to get away to a good start. We'll take care of this somehow, ourselves. You and Lutie and I."

She knew, as she spoke, that she was not going to leave the house while her uncle was so desperately ill. She was going to stick to Lutie and Aunt Edna while they needed her. Allen would simply have to wait for her until the two women were able to carry on without her.

"I'll go up and get your uncle's bankbook," said Aunt Edna, getting to her feet slowly and painfully. She went limping upstairs and came back with the book in her hand.

"I think you'd better go right downtown with this. If you don't dawdle you can get down before 2 o'clock. Try to get them to give you a hundred dollars." She handed the book over to Susan. "I'm sure Wallace can arrange it."

Susan decided to telephone Wallace about the money before she started. She had a vague feeling that she ought not leave the house. That something dreadful was going to happen and that if she were there perhaps she could hold it back.

"No. Nobody can touch your uncle's account," Wallace told her over the telephone when she called him. "But I'll stop in to see you people on my way home tonight. I think I can fix you up with what you want. I'll be there a little after 5."

At five when Susan put on her wraps to go out to telephone Allen at his boarding house, Aunt Edna stopped her, calling out from the parlor to ask where she was going.

"I won't be gone five minutes," Susan called back to her.

"Better wait until Wallace comes," said her aunt. "Lutie's asleep, and I'll feel just as if I'm all alone here if you go now."

Calls Up Allen

At half past five Wallace arrived. He saw, as she opened the door to him, that there were marks of fatigue, like gray shadows, under her eyes, and that the corners of her mouth drooped.

"I've an errand to do, and I'm going to do it while you're here," she said to him. "Aunt Edna's nervous and she doesn't want to be left alone with Lutie. I'll be right back."

In the middle of the next block was a candy store kept by an old widow named Mrs. Bushman. It was the sort of shop that sells penny candy to school children—licorice strings and almond balls and lemon sticks. Just inside the door was a shelf stacked high with newspapers and the cheaper sort of magazines. At one end of it was a pay telephone. Susan picked it up and gave the number that Allen had written down for her the night before.

A woman's voice said "Hello" in her ear after a moment. "Mrs. Jones speaking."

Jones . . . Yes, Jones was the name, Susan saw, glancing down at the paper she held. "May I please speak to Mr. Allen Sholes?"

There was no answer to her question but after a long wait Allen's voice came over the wire. "Hello."

"This is Susan."

"Yes, I know." Simply the sound of his voice made a lump of tears come up into the back of Susan's throat.

"You told me to call you up," she said, and wondered if he could tell by the sound of her voice that she was half crying.

"Yes. You were going to tell me what you'd decided to do."

She nodded, caught sight of herself in the dim mirror above the shelf, and stopped. "I don't know what to say to you," she said. "Everything is just the way it was last night . . . I wish I could see you."

"How about coming downtown to have dinner with me?"

Can't Get Away

"I couldn't do that. Couldn't get away."

"You could after you'd finished the work out there," he said briskly. "Even your maid used to have her evenings off."

"Couldn't you come out here after you've had your dinner, Allen?"

"No. I've been kicked out of your house once, Susan. I'll be doggoned if I give them a chance to do it again."

"Well, then, will you meet me on the corner about seven?" At seven Lutie and Aunt Edna would be eating their dinner.

When she got back to the house Wallace was in the parlor, sitting in Uncle Worthy's chair before the fire, smoking a cigar and talking in a low sympathetic voice. Lutie had put on her pearl earrings and some lipstick for him, and Aunt Edna was looking brighter than she had looked in a long time. She threw Susan a rather watery smile when she came into the room.

"Do you know what this wonderful boy has done, Susan? He's let us take $300 out of his own pocket! He explained that we couldn't touch Worthy's money, but that we could borrow this now and pay it back when Worthy's better."

Wallace got up and looked quizzically at Susan, his hands behind him, his heels clicking together. "Mrs. Broderick has asked me to stay to dinner. Do you mind if I do?" he asked.

Stays for Dinner

At half past six the four of them sat down to lamb stew, bread and butter and plain lettuce salad. At exactly seven Susan brought in the dessert, a bowl of preserved peaches, and the battered old coffee service. While Aunt Edna was pouring the coffee into the tiny eggshell cups she slipped out into the kitchen without making any excuse. She had left her coat there on a chair. She slipped into it and went quietly out at the side door.

Allen was standing directly in front of the house where Wallace's car stood, its hood lights on, and the Scotch plaid blanket covering the radiator. He was looking at it and he did not see her until she touched him on the sleeve of his overcoat.

"The old familiar car in the old familiar spot," he said dryly.

"Oh, Allen, you just want to misunderstand everything! I had nothing to do with inviting Wallace here. Aunt Edna asked him while I was out of the house telephoning you."

He lifted his shoulders in a shrug. "Yes. I'm such a pariah that you can't even call me up from the house," he said.

Silence after that. They walked down to the corner, the pain on their faces hidden from each other by the winter darkness.

Doesn't Understand Her

"I don't understand you, Susan," Allen said finally when they were back at the car once more. "You say you love me, but last night you let me leave that house alone—and that was before your uncle had his stroke. You tell me you've broken your engagement to Steffen, but he was here last night to see you, and tonight he's having dinner with you . . . Last night you promised me that you'd marry me today. I'm ready to marry you right now . . . Now, how about you?" His voice was as cold and clear as the night itself.

"Allen, how can I go away and get married in the middle of all this? Susan's hands twisted themselves together as she tried to explain her predicament to him. "There's Uncle Worthy lying in bed unconscious, and my aunt's so sick and so frightened that they're like a couple of helpless children—"

"They weren't like helpless children last night when they were laying the law down to you!" Allen cut in roughly, angrily. "Susan, you don't want to marry me, do you? You've changed your mind about me since that fellow came home and you've had a chance to think over his gardenias and his automobile and his swell job at the bank. Why don't you be honest with yourself and with me and tell me so?"

Susan could have laughed at his jealousy if she had not been so close to tears. Her love for him was so firm a fact in her own mind that she couldn't believe that he doubted it.

"If you want me to be honest, I love you," she said. "Why, since Wallace has come home I've almost hated him. I used to think he was good looking, and I don't even think him that any more—I know he's still as attractive as he used to seem to me, but I can't see it with my own eyes." She bent her head quickly and in the glow of Wallace's parking lights, she kissed the lapel of Allen's coat.

Wants to Marry

"Well, then, why won't you come away with me tonight and be married—just so I can be sure of you? I told you last night that it would be all right with me if you came back here for a few days until your aunts are well." He held her cold, bare hands in his, pressing them hard in his urgency. "And while you're here I'll be hunting up some kind of flat for us. It probably won't be much—two rooms up over a vacant lot or something like that—but we'll be together, Susan. I'll wipe all the dishes for you, and scrub the floors on Saturday afternoon. It'll be fun, Susan, and in a few months I'll have a regular job with real money—"

Susan covered her mouth with one of her hands. "It isn't a bit of use to plan anything like that, Allen. It sounds like heaven, but it won't work out. This sickness of Uncle Worthy's isn't a matter of just a few days. The doctor says he may be in a wheel chair for months. For years. And I can't leave the house for a long time. I can't see how I can. Why, those two women can't even make the furnace fire burn—" She wheeled suddenly as a familiar voice was blown to her on the wind. It came from the house, where Aunt Edna stood on the porch, sharply outlined against the lighted doorway like a figure cut out of black paper and pasted on an orange-colored rectangle.

"Susan!" she called. "That you out there, Susan?"

"I'll be right in, Aunt Edna."

But the short solid figure did not budge an inch. It stood and waited.

"Susan, don't go in. If you give a darn about me you'll come with me now and be married. You can come back here and stay as long as you want to, and I won't raise any fuss about it—but marry me now. I don't know where you and I stand this way. Steffen at the house all the time, and your aunts talking against your marrying me all the time—the way they talked to you in front of me last night. I'm going to lose you, Susan, if I let you go back there tonight." He took her hand in his again.

"Susan!" Aunt Edna's voice came again. For 20 years she had been making scathing remarks about the mothers of Centre street who came out on the front steps and called their children in from the street. At last she was doing it herself.

Flies carry disease, follies!

We have noticed that flies don't worry some people. They look at them as pests, but they don't see them as any danger at all.

As a matter of fact, the doctors have discovered that flies carry many kinds of dangerous germs. They are dirty, crawling things. It is everybody's duty to get rid of them if we can, and to guard against them as much as we can. Those common, ordinary house flies often cause deaths!

One kind of protection is to screen your house well, and then to watch when you open the door that no flies get in. This is especially important around a kitchen or store, where there is food and sweet things. The flies seem to come long distances, in swarms, to find food, especially sugar and syrups of all kinds.

Work hard, if need be, to keep your home clear of flies. Keep screens tight, and your garbage can, which helps to attract and even breed them, tight shut and cleaned out with boiling water as often as possible. When an occasional fly does find a way indoors, swat him as quickly as possible.

Junior Patrol members can really and truly save lives by killing flies. They are one of the worst pests known to man. Let us all hope that the day will come when we can really get rid of them—actually kill them off once and for all.

It would take the working together of everybody to clean up every single place where flies might breed. But it could be done. In the meantime, let us all try to keep flies away from the things we eat and drink.

We haven't seen any art work drawn by Junior Patrol members for quite a while. If you know how to draw, don't forget that we like to see how you are doing. Send us some of your drawings—especially if they are drawn on white cardboard with black ink.

Maybe some of our members are clever at making things, too. We knew some school boys who made mandolins and banjoes in school—and they were good ones, too. Let us know about anything like that.

His Rival

Daily Short Short-Story

By JUNE WILLARD

The Channings were, as everyone supposed, an average couple, placid and uninteresting. They had been married 10 years, with only the usual differences, none of which had ever amounted to a real quarrel.

Tom Channing was a busy executive in a large office, had his important place in the corporation. He had his private office, secretary and a generous salary.

After dinner, he read the paper, or there was a game of bridge in their own home or at some neighbor's. And it saw the Channings peacefully sleeping in the mahogany twin beds in their pretty bedroom.

Nothing had marred the serenity of their existence, when suddenly the blow fell—like a bolt from the blue. Blows always do fall suddenly, as far as that goes.

At breakfast, one morning, Tom, looking up suddenly, with a frown creasing his forehead, said: "I wonder what shows are on now. I want to get tickets to some good show for tomorrow night."

Mary sat up in pleased surprise, her small face pink with pleasure. "Oh, Tom, that would be fine! Look in the paper and see what shows there are." Tom seemed to bring his wandering thoughts back with difficulty. He looked at his wife as if she were a stranger. Mary drew back, feeling a little flat.

"I didn't mean for us," impatiently. "It seems that it is an unwritten law in our office for each man to take his secretary to a show once a year."

"And your wife, not at all," Mary burst out, angry and humiliated.

"Oh, don't be silly. It doesn't mean a thing. But if it is the custom, as it seems to be, I suppose I'll have to fall in line and do it, too."

He rustled the paper as he looked for the list of plays, and under cover of the confusion Mary left the table, murmuring something about calling the children, an excuse wasted on thin air.

But she was at the door when he left, with her usual dutiful farewell kiss, outwardly restored to her usual calm, but inwardly seething.

Mary grew more and more angry as the hours passed. She snapped at the children, crabbed at the maid and was in a state of mind to spill the whole story to the first convenient confidante.

So when her most intimate friend, Alice Turtle, ran in during the afternoon out came the story.

Inwardly Alice was much amused at Mary's wrath. But she pretended to console Mary for her husband's defection, and pondered her friend's plea to help her to make Tom see the error of his ways.

Finally she said, "I know, Mary, the very thing for you to do. You can just show Tom that he isn't the only one who can play hookey. I know a man, a peach of a fellow, and I know him well enough to tell him all about it. Listen."

"I hate to do that," Mary drew back in distaste. "I hate to discuss Tom with an utter stranger."

"Shucks," cried Alice. "I imagine that your Tom may have discussed you, at some time or other, with Miss Allen," thereby adding fuel to the flame and strengthening Mary's waning resolution.

* * *

"All right," she said, "can you work it for tomorrow night? It's soon, but Tom is going to take Miss Allen then, and I'd like to make it the same time."

"I think I can," was the reply. "Wait, I'll call Horace right now."

"That you, Horace?"

"Yes, it's Alice. How's yourself?"

"Oh, sure, fine. Say, Horace, got a date for tomorrow night?"

"Well, do you want to take a nice lady to a show? It's for a joke. Come over to our apartment, tonight, and I'll tell you all about it. What's that? Oh, sure. See you tonight. Bye."

"But, who is he?" queried Mary.

"Horace Dalton," was Alice's surprising answer. And Mary gasped. For Horace Dalton was the city's most eligible bachelor—very rich, and very much sought after. But he was a really fine chap, likable and all that, but always considered rather inaccessible.

At five the next evening the telephone rang. It was Tom. "I won't be home to dinner, Mary. I'll be——"

Admonishing the maid to watch the children carefully, Mary left for her evening of gayety and pleasure.

In spite of the good show, the nice little supper afterwards in an exclusive restaurant, in spite of her pretty clothes and the knowledge that she was looking her best, Mary was worried. And she felt a great relief when finally Dalton's big car, with its very correct chauffeur, stopped in front of her own door.

"Thank you so much for a very lovely evening," she said, holding out her hand to Dalton.

"I'm delighted that you could go with me. And I've enjoyed it very much myself. May I call sometime?" was his courteous reply. He was quite taken with his evening's pretty companion. Her face flamed and she left without replying.

She was puzzled to see a light in the living room and to find Tom opening the door for her.

"Where on earth have you been?" he demanded.

"Why — why——" faltered Mary, "didn't you go to the show with Miss Allen?"

"I did not," explosively. "I couldn't get tickets so I called it all off. Came home at 8, found you gone and Ellen didn't know where. Said you went with a fine gentleman. Who is he?"

Suddenly Mary saw the funny side of it all and dropped into a chair, overcome with laughter.

"What have you been up to, young lady? Now, out with it." Tom shook her shoulder.

So Mary told him all the story—her jealousy and anger and plan to get even.

He kissed her and said: "Next time you go off on a tangent like that for goodness' sake let me know. I almost went crazy."

Get Yourself Classified for the New Leisure

If everybody will stop talking for a minute, and pull up chairs, we'll discuss Social Planning. Under the new Uniform Code for Leisure Time Regimentation, all of us are divided into one of three classifications. Those on the left are called, for brevity, the FBBHWSTLCTA, or Former Bloated Bond Holders Who Spend Their Leisure Criticising The Administration. All who wish to remain in this classification are kindly asked to register for special grumbling guidance. The Centerists or Backward Looking Group will be asked to assemble on prominent street corners and spend their leisure sighing for the past and clenching and unclenching their greedy little fists. Those on the extreme right are the Forward looking workers, who really belong on the left, and who are permitted to use one hand to protect bruises received during the so-called class struggle, which will take place on the Columbia campus at the beginning of the term.

The lips of a country boarding house are musty and fearsome.

The happiness is accumulative. Each succeeding improvement makes life like she were too horrible.

The village railroad platform should be the tip-off. Cash Kidd's virtuous walkest planks for superior to it.

The train stops at signals only. The sightseer went nuts when the smoking birds burned the screaming whistle.

The drive-up to the suburban ranch house ain't the finish of the Kentucky Derby. You may have seen a chicken walking. But you never saw a farmer's flunkheard and pig running.

That hose is very lackadaisical in the shuffle of the old family chaise. He is what is known as a chaise lounger.

The inspection of yourself and your luggage from the screwmds to portico is patterned after the line-up at the police headquarters.

The delightful old lady in the end rocker peeps on to a mimsie. She's got the eagle eye that can take your fingerprints if you are wearing actions. She looks at your traveling togs with an accusing gaze that makes you feel like the culprit in some of those popular European trunk mysteries.

The host mumbles an introduction to the 20 or 30 inquisitors at the supper table. They all get your name but you don't get theirs.

By the time the final plates reach you there is just enough left in them to give you a clue of what they are having for supper.

In five minutes everybody knows what you -the for a living, your uncle's maiden name and why you left Pittsburgh in 1908. They whisper your wife advice about the dizzy blondbe who came up for herself and has flirted with everything wearing trousers, including the scarecrow.

That starts a rout battle with you and your wife. Well, the blonde looks like the figurehead on the bowsprit of the wreck of the Hesperus.

But the gossip gets in its blended poisoning. The wife cries all night and scratches your face for breakfast. That morning the dizzonian blonde smiles sweetly at you and breaks up your happy home that is all boarded up for the summer.

The wife goes to Reno, you get a Mexicoan divorce and the blonde never knows a thing about it because she is so nearsighted she didn't even know you were at the boarding house.

And the sweet old lady continues to whisper advice and hang away at the needle-point chair she started in the summer of 1880.

Vital Principles at Issue

Republican Leaders Speak Patriotically of the New Deal's Dangerous Trends

The speeches of Chairman Henry P. Fletcher, of the Republican National Committee, and United States Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg, in Jackson, Mich., on the anniversary of the founding of the Republican party, are comparable in their vigor and effectiveness with the arraignment of the growth of bureaucracy by Senator Borah in his Fourth of July address.

Each of the speeches at Jackson was a thoughtful, patriotic and sincere discussion of the dangerous trend of the New Deal.

Without flinching from facts, and yet with no exaggeration of them, both Chairman Fletcher and Senator Vandenberg were evidently determined to avoid political carping and partisan fault-finding, and to appeal to their hearers on the broadest grounds of love of country and loyalty to our institutions.

They gave utterance to what every thoughtful man is thinking and to fears which are rising in every patriotic breast as to the ultimate effect upon our form of government and upon our individual liberties of the crude theories and wild fancies, now paraded in Washington as the essentials of recovery and reform.

It is time for a declaration of sound American principles, and their declaration cannot too often be repeated!

A moment inevitably comes when it is necessary to formulate and declare vital principles. Not to do this, is to run the risk of being so carried away by the current of facts that it becomes difficult and even impossible to regain one's hold of fundamental principle.

Chairman Fletcher, in insisting on a return to the sound principles of democracy, denied that his party was opposed to true progress or genuine reform. The necessity to regulate private enterprise and to supervise many industries which are affected by a public interest and owe a public duty was freely conceded.

But the performance of such a duty does not mean the forsaking of every sound and established principle of finance, economics and democratic government.

Senator Vandenberg, citing the unswerving support which the Republican minority had given to President Roosevelt's measures which were clearly intended to relieve the distressd and to afford emergency support to weakened and imperiled industry, assailed the aims and theoretical objectives which have nothing to do with either relief or recovery.

In this, he undoubtedly was speaking for a great number of his countrymen.

We have witnessed the power bestowed in the interests of all, turned against the people. We have seen arbitrary assumptions accepted as unquestionable truths. We have beheld a manifest effort to modify the character of the state and the long established order of society, and to substitute something, which no one apparently is able to define, but which is clearly alien to the principles and instincts which are characteristic of us as a people.

It is time these deceitful dreams were replaced by healthy political and economical ideas, and that the sober business habits, which at all periods have distinguished the American people, should be permitted to rescue the nation and re-establish its prosperity as it has always done in the crises of the past.

These vigorous addresses should carry a warning to the secret Fascists and the thinly disguised Socialists of the New Deal that America will never consent to be a regimented nation; that it will never accept a system wholly new to it, under which the spirit of the Constitution is "mocked and mangled;" and that the free and independent citizen of the United States will not lightly make over his independence and freedom to a scheme of bureaucratic tyranny and to a horde of tax-fed and parasitic bureaucrats.

Mr. Park Takes Notice

The Police Corruption Charges Deserve the Attention of the Grand Jury

District Attorney Andrew T. Park's request for a transcript of the sensational testimony given at the Police Research Commission's hearing Monday corroborates what every thoughtful citizen must have said to himself on reading the charges made against former public officials: "This is a matter for the grand jury."

We have specific allegations, with names, addresses and a wealth of details given, that men high in the police department took bribes from criminals as the price of allowing them to commit their crimes unmolested.

No matter how it may be glossed over, that is the accusation in its elemental simplicity.

The seriousness of the charge is not mitigated by the fact that the crime which the police officials, according to the testimony, were bribed to protect was merely the operation of an alleged disorderly house.

Sound public policy demands that a thorough investigation shall be made by District Attorney Park and the grand jury, and that if indictments are found the defendants shall be prosecuted vigorously.

Civil Service Laxity

The Present Commission Has a Golden Opportunity to Promote the Merit System

The Civil Service Commission's report, stating that "extreme laxity" has prevailed in recent years in the enforcement of the civil service regulations, comes as no surprise.

For years many jobs in the municipal service have been filled, not because of any peculiar fitness for the positions, but as a reward for political activities. We have had, not the merit system, as was contemplated when the civil service regulations were promulgated, but the spoils system.

The late Mayor Charles H. Kline was very frank about it. There was no concealment of the fact that he wanted men in city jobs who could produce votes on election day, and expected the Civil Service Commission to help him in that purpose.

The present administration has not been entirely guiltless. It is a matter of record that it has discharged, or attempted to discharge, city employes entitled to the protection of the civil service law, for no other reason than to give the places to political henchmen.

There is, however, encouragement in the present commission's report to believe that appreciation is dawning that such a policy is the reverse of commendable.

If the commission's actions measure up to its brave words, we shall see less hiring and firing for selfish political reasons.

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, July 11.—Baseball fans have, with a twinge, been watching the deglamouring of their greatest idol, Babe Ruth, this season. All experts of the game practically agree the mighty swatter is through. Some indeed have begged him in print to step out.

They do not want him to wait for the inevitable hoots, but make his bow while the crowd still roars. Even now the applause that greets him as he steps to the plate is mostly sentimentality. But there is a doggedness about Babe in the corona of eclipse.

Evidently he wants to go out with the flags flying, bands playing. He is a sturdy old war horse and anything may happen, but the breaks are against him. While he has no great fortune, he is comfortably fixed. His name has value if lent to many commercial enterprises.

I am told he is beginning to feel the first faint tingle of frost. More and more he seeks the seclusion of his family away from the diamond. He shrinks from visiting those places in public where he was once the attraction of all eyes. His broad smile has become a glum smirk.

Few stepped out of the limelight with more punctilio than Geraldine Farrar, the singer. When she felt she had given her public her best, she vanished from the headlines almost overnight. Her box-office value was and is potential. Only a few intimates see her and when she dines in public it is at some obscure restaurant. No one has ever taken her place with American girlhood.

I once saw an idol straighten up in a topple and hold his pedestal—at least for the evening. He was a slipping movie star who came on late at a benefit. The crowd was tired, restless, disrespectful and tossed him a juicy raspberry. He flinched as though lashed with a whip, stepped to the stage edge with arms extended and in a quavering voice pleaded: "You convince me I'm washed up. But let me hang out here long enough to dry." And he finished to a tumult.

Speaking of hoots, here's one just arrived splitting the plate from Denver: "You certainly use big words to say nothing."

The most accomplished duelist with hecklers from the stage was Julius Tannen in his chatterbox monologue days. Those who had watched him parry thrusts in the code duello used to encourage some unsuspecting smart-elec to rib Tannen from a stage box. Just to see the fireworks. In a flash the comedian would plough under the heckler and leave him floundering before a howling audience. Joe Frisco can handle all comers, too, on a cabaret floor. The great gift in taking on hecklers is not to lose one's temper. It was the one thing Rudy Vallee did not learn in his protracted floor show run on Broadway. He flushed red and invited them outside.

Those sheep-like dogs called Bedlingtons are in high favor on Long Island estates. The first of the species was brought to America about nine years ago by the English actor, Cyril Maude. Despite their lamb-like docility, they are terrors to prowlers and will die gallantly to protect children.

The Bar Building in the 40's is an enormous structure housing only lawyers. While waiting for a friend in his car near the entrance yesterday I found a sudden interest in ingoing and outgoing visitors. Those going in seemed to walk glum and hesitant. But they came out stepping briskly and in apparently high spirits. Somehow one expects the reverse, visiting a lawyer.

Kyrle Bellow, matinee idol of his era, suffered from rose colds. The sight of a single rose sent him into a coughing, sneezing and watery-eyed fit. On tour in San Francisco he went to a dinner party. A huge bowl of roses centering the table touched him off. His hostess insisted he be brave, walk up and smell them. So goaded he approached choking and gasping in an almost apoplectic frenzy. At last he bent over and sniffed. They were artificial. And he never had a rose cold again.

A little French cafeteria attendant on Madison avenue and I have more fun. At occasional visits I try out my taxicab French. Today, stopping in for a quick cup of coffee, I ordered: "Cafe." She inquired: "Au lait?" I replied "Oui, oui." And added: "Also la spoon." We just whooped, hollered and carried on.

LISTEN, WORLD

By Elsie Robinson

Sorrow Isn't Sacred

It took me a long time to realize that sorrow isn't sacred; that prolonged grief is as much a disease as any wasting sickness; that it's as vicious to indulge it as it would be to encourage tuberculosis or cancer.

We're taught such amazing lies about sorrow—told we must "respect" it, and that lives which remain crippled by loss are pitifully beautiful.

There was an old couple in our town when I was a youngster. Thirty years before they had lost their only idolized daughter. She had died shortly before Christmas. Since then they had shut themselves away from the world; never opened their home to guests; never lighted another Christmas candle.

Her room remained just as she had left it. With the exception of the kitchen and a bedroom the house was locked. When the rest of the street twinkled at twilight, their place stood dark as a tomb. They boasted that they had never set a table since the day of the funeral. They ate from bags and cans which the grocer deposited against the closed back door.

Once a week they emerged and made an afternoon pilgrimage to their daughter's grave. Hidden behind the cypress trees, we youngsters used to watch them, fascinated. First they would tidy up the plot, pulling the weeds slowly with lax, gray fingers. Then they would seat themselves upon the curbing.

They did not cry. They must have used up their tears long ago. Until it grew so dark that the road was a dim blur, they would sit there silent, motionless, their sagging faces as empty of purpose as the dead around them.

Our parents scolded us when they found we'd been watching. They tried to make us feel such grief was holy, almost like being in church, and we were wrong to snoop. We listened, mumbled promises—but felt there was something wrong somewhere.

Giving up everything for 30 years. Never having parties or anything! Just sitting around. It all seemed pretty silly. We had never seen that long dead girl, but we were quite sure she couldn't have been worth all that fuss. Nobody nor nothin' could. Somehow, thinking of them sitting there like that, we wanted to snicker. But we "didn't dast."

Now I know that we, young savages though we were, had a much more healthy attitude about the whole business than our parents. It was silly, worse than silly, to waste life like that. It didn't help anybody. It wasn't even love. It was one of those slimy things that so often masquerade as love.

But we cannot realize that when first we go into the shadows. There is no realization then but pain, and the endless loneliness that is like a lost voice wailing through the night.

Sitting there, crying so vainly to summon our vanished happiness, we do not know that we are listening only to the voice of our own grief.

A cruel thing to say about a broken heart? Yes, but it is so; for natural grief was never meant to be prolonged. After each winter of sorrow there should be a spring.

Grief is only "sacred" as it breaks the way to greater life. When grief becomes an end in its own self, it is no longer fine or pitiful. Then it becomes a menace.

Yesterday we wept out of sheer agony. Today we weep because we've found it serves our end. We won't admit this. We'd cry in anger that it wasn't true. And most of the world would cry with us. But it's so!

Tears soon became a vicious racket. People are kind to those who weep; kinder, far, than to those who laugh. Give them attention which they never had before. Make excuses for them. Let them slip, pityingly, from responsibilities which they'd otherwise have to bear.

FOR THE SELFISH, THE CONCEITED, THE COWARDLY AND LAZY, THERE IS NO GREATER CONVENIENCE THAN A BROKEN HEART.

Yet there are no more tragic creatures on earth than those who give their lives over to mourning. For nine times out of ten they are self-deluded. They are the victims of vicious, sentimental belief in the sanctity of sorrow. And they are poisoned by that very sympathy which we give so generously.

Bureaucracy Is Outgrowth Of Oxcart Government

By James T. Williams, Jr.

SENATOR BORAH'S suggestion that the Seventy-third Congress be called again into special session to repeal recently-enacted law to which he objects will not be adopted by President Roosevelt.

If the President has his way, the late and unlamented Seventy-third Congress will never meet again, and it cannot convene again except upon the call of the President.

Short of a national emergency bringing a challenge beyond the power of the President to meet, it is safe to predict that there will be no additional session of Congress until the Congress to be elected next November convenes in regular annual session next January.

But some of the abuses against which Senator Borah protested so eloquently in his recent address will doubtless receive the earnest attention of the President between now and the meeting of the new Congress. Especially is this true of those abuses chargeable to the rapid growth of bureauacracy since the present administration entered power.

The dictionary definition of bureaucracy is:

"Government by bureaus; specifically, excessive multiplication of, and concentration in, administrative bureaus."

The principle of bureaucracy, according to the dictionary definition, "tends to official interference in many of the properly private affairs of life, and to the inefficient and obstructive performance of duty through minute subdivisions of functions, inflexible formality, and pride of place."

* * *

How Senator Borah Defines Bureaucracy

SENATOR BORAH'S definition of bureaucracy vividly portrays the exasperating evils of this political pest.

Of bureaucracy he said:

"It is simply that meddlesome, irritating, confusing, undermining, destructive thing called bureaucracy. It is that form of government which steals away man's rights in the name of public interests and taxes him to death in the name of recovery.

"Of all forms of government, which has ever been permitted to torture the human family, the most burdensome, the most expensive, the most demoralizing, the most devastating, to human happiness, and the most destructive of human values is a bureaucracy. It has destroyed every civilization upon which it has fastened its lecherous grip."

Senator Borah was addressing his protest chiefly against the recent growth of federal bureaucracy. And there is ample ground for his concern on this score. The fact that nearly 100,000 citizens have been added to the federal payroll within the last 15 months and that scores of new bureaus, boards, commissions and other federal agencies have been set up to exercise the extraordinary grants of power made by the last Congress to the President are the outward and visible signs of bureaucracy's grip on the federal government.

But the most torturing, the most burdensome, the most expensive, the most devastating and the most destructive bureaucracy under the flag today, is that "which has fastened its lecherous grip" on county and local governments in every state in the Union.

The people are being taxed to support more than 3,000 county governments when they do not require, for the transaction of their public business in these areas, more than 300 county governments, not one of which should be longer tolerated in a metropolitan area.

Taxed to Support Needless Unit

THE PEOPLE are being taxed to support thousands of local units of government for which there is no longer the slightest public necessity.

Perhaps, Senator Borah in his next broadcast will address himself to this aspect of the problem of bureaucracy. If he does, he can count on the assistance of President Roosevelt in bringing home to the people the imperative need of modernizing the obsolete system of county and local government from which President Roosevelt's state of New York and Senator Borah's state of Idaho and every other state in the Union are suffering today.

If "the lecherous grip" of bureaucracy on the throat of government is to be removed, not only must the federal government be reorganized and every independent agency, except those possessed of quasi-judicial power, brought within the control of one of the executive departments, but the oxcart system of county and local government must be overthrown, and the authority of the several states reclaimed and made commensurate with their respective responsibility.

To be effective, the warfare against bureaucracy must be waged within the several states as well as within the federal city.

The Nation Needs an Audit

The Government Should Tell Us How Much We Owe, And How It's to Be Paid.

By RICHARD WASHBURN CHILD

Diplomatist and Lawyer.

(Mr. Child has just returned from Europe, where he visited practically every large country as an observer for the United States government. He has now become a regular contributor to the Sun-Telegraph. Watch for his next article.)

WHAT this country needs now is to take account of stock. Congress has gone off in a spray to fix the fences back home.

The President is in the Navy now.

Fall elections draw nigh.

Partisan charges and counter charges are being made wherever the two-party system remains with all its awkwardness and inaccuracy, but with its good old American safeguard of preserving an opposition though saints themselves run the country.

In Washington there is a heated lull hovering over the panting bureaucracy.

In the country the distant rumblings of the thunder of a campaign have begun.

BEFORE the wind comes up and during this pause and while the brainy fellows cannot reach the ear of a popular and persuasive President, and when economists are whispering and opposition orators are yelling figures—now is the time!

Now is the time to ask the good old questions:

"What have we got?"

"What did it cost?"

It is a fashionable, indeed, a stylish thing in Washington, certainly in Congress and surely in the bureaucracy and probably everywhere else, to preface any such wide American demand by speaking of the courage, the direct action, the geniality, the efficiency of a distinguished President.

The next step, according to the latest Washington mode, is to accept graciously the invitation of those who from their federal jobs and congressional seats so patriotically support a President to whom jobs and seats are to be credited in toto. That invitation is to "engage only in CONSTRUCTIVE criticism." It is an incautious invitation since nothing can be more dangerous to power than just and constructive criticism. Unjust and spleenful criticism is a bark without bite.

COMPLIMENTS to the President have now become cheap perfumery atomized upon the real flowers of achievement now in the presidential Washington hothouse. Constructive criticism cannot be the menace it may be made to the weeds and diseased plants among these achievements or the weeds and tares around the old Constitution, until the facts are out.

What we need in this hush is to have men without partisanship find out FACTS.

Facts are nonpartisan. They should be equally welcome to a Fletcher or a Farley. They should be welcome to the managers of our distended national business and heaven knows to us—whose pocketbooks or those of our children must sooner or later fill the deficits and whose liberties and right to property must sooner or later be appraised after this storm has gone.

Let us not allow sweet or ringing voices and radio receptions to give us narcotics. A government which is accused of "going professor" should be the first, we observers believe in Washington, to say "fie for shame, the old politicians who dealt in phrases; show us the fact-findings, hard-boiled, and dry-iced figures."

THE professor-minded, no matter how generous in the open hand of helpfulness, must surely also be accountancy-minded when the taxpayers who gave the wherewithal or must be assessed for it, say: "What does it cost?"

We, who belong to the United States, are often rocked to sleep with the ideas that governments merely rub a magic bottle when money is needed, or that government is a paying business where "we stockholders" may get a dividend, or that by taxing the rich we can get the ultimate burden off the backs of the poor.

Washington is full of such nonsense today. There is not half enough recognition in our capital that what is spent must be paid by you and me or our children. Every time a dollar is spent you and I or the children OWE IT, and there is no miracle which can produce a solution other than "pay, repudiate, or go through bankruptcy."

AS A STARTER, let us ask the government to say, without any of this fol-de-rol about a "balanced" budget—

What does Uncle Sam—WE—owe?

How much has it increased in two years?

What exactly is the interest and service charge per capita which we taxpayers must carry?

How much more do we owe in principal and interest, on top of this, for local and other taxes?

In the morning-after what is the whole bill?

That will be a starter. There is nothing partisan in this question.

"WHAT DID IT ACTUALLY COST?"

"How much must be raised by taxation—awkward and stifling methods of taxation—to pay the piper?"

IF THE PIPER is not paid there will be no more pipers—a government which ultimately cannot pay, cannot borrow—as some European governments have learned today.

And finally, then can only tax less, not more, because taxation curls up endeavor in the end and sucks all the blood from the corpse of production.

With these principles in mind, the country needs an audit.

If the audit is accurate it should be just as useful to Farley, who as Democratic National Chairman defends, as to Fletcher the Republican chairman who attacks.

This audit is much more vital to the country than anything either man may say. The audit is not political at all. It is just sense plus UNPERFUMED and UNTAINTED truth.

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. Mundy

You get away from home too seldom.

You should get out and mingle more with people.

This will keep you from being narrow and self-centered.

You have lost interest in things formerly affording you pleasure and opportunities to gain useful information.

As a result of lack of contact with people outside, your vision is becoming dwarfed and you rehash the thoughts of years ago.

You are giving more consideration to sordid subjects.

You are becoming more faultfinding and selfish.

You demand too much and give too little.

You are more irritable than you used to be.

You repeat evil things about people which come to you in an indirect way with the usual distortion of facts.

If you would absent yourself from your home more often, go places and meet new people, you would get a new slant on life.

You need to forget the disagreeable things in your life upon which you are now dwelling too much.

New contacts will create for you a different line of thought.

And it is likely you are badly in need of it.
